

Contents

List of Figures	page ix
Acknowledgements	x
Introduction	I
1 Theoretical Virtues, Truth and the Argument from Simplicity	5
1.1 Theoretical Virtues	5
1.2 The Explanatory Defence of Realism and Its Criticisms	20
1.3 Theoretical Virtues: Epistemic or Pragmatic?	31
1.4 The First Virtuous Argument for Realism: The Argument from Simplicity	35
2 Pessimism, Base Rates and the No-Virtue-Coincidence Argument	39
2.1 The Pessimistic Meta-Induction and the Divide et Impera Move	39
2.2 False Posits and Novel Success: What IF?	46
2.3 PMI versus PUA	47
2.4 Broader Concerns: The Base-Rate Fallacy	49
2.5 The Central Virtuous Argument for Realism: Virtue Convergence	52
2.6 Conclusion	68
3 Novel Success and Predictivism	69
3.1 Worrall's Account of Use-Novelty: Weak and Strong	70
3.2 Parameter Freedom and Local-Symptomatic Predictivism	74
3.3 Non-Starters	77
3.4 Deflationary Approaches and Comparative Novel Success	81
3.5 Mendeleev's Periodic Table and the Prediction of Chemical Elements	86
3.6 Conclusion: Novel Success and Nagging Popperian Intuitions	92
4 Theoretical Fertility without Novel Success	95
4.1 McMullinian Fertility and Nolan's Challenge	96
4.2 The Bohr–Sommerfeld Model of the Atom	103
4.3 An Objectionable Change	116
4.4 Conclusion	118

5	Ad Hoc Hypotheses and the Argument from Coherence	119
5.1	Ad Hocness: The State of the Art	120
5.2	A Coherentist Conception of Ad Hocness	132
5.3	In-Depth Illustrations of the Coherentist Conception	141
5.4	The Third Virtuous Argument for Realism: The Argument from Coherence	153
6	Virtues as Confidence Boosters and the Argument from Choice	156
6.1	The Negative View, the Dictatorship Condition, and Its Violation	156
6.2	Historical Case Studies	160
6.3	The Fourth Virtuous Argument for Realism: The Argument from Choice	183
6.4	Objections	184
7	Philosophy of Science by Historical Means	188
7.1	Laudan's Naïve and Sophisticated Naturalism	189
7.2	Rational Reconstruction	193
7.3	Concept Clarification	204
	Conclusion	210
	Epilogue: The Demarcation Problem	215
	Bibliography	225
	Index	245