Contents

List of Tables ix
Acknowledgements x
Abbreviations and Conventions for Citing Kant’s Works xiii

Introduction: Rethinking the Kantian Reflective Ideal 1
0.1 The Importance of Reflection 1
0.2 Modelling a Solution 2
0.3 Précis 7
0.4 Comments on Methodology 10

PART I REFLECTION

1 Kant on the Requirement to Reflect 15
  1.1 Preliminaries 15
  1.2 Drawing the Distinction: Two Notions of Reflection 16
  1.3 A Puzzle about Reflection 19
  1.4 Constitutive and Normative Requirements to Reflect as Distinguished in Logic 21
  1.5 Affect and Passion as Modes of Reflective Failure 33
  1.6 Reflection-n: Merging the Accounts 46
  1.7 Conclusion 48

2 Healthy Human Understanding 53
  2.1 Introduction 53
  2.2 The Three Maxims 55
  2.3 Common and Healthy Understanding 58
  2.4 The Three Maxims and the Requirement to Reflect-n 69
  2.5 Conclusion 77

3 Attention, Perception, Experience 81
  3.1 Introduction 81
  3.2 Attention and Perception 83
Contents

PART II VIRTUE

4 Conceptions of Reason and Epistemic Normativity
4.1 Introduction
4.2 Reason as a Cognitive Capacity
4.3 Epistemic Normativity and Background Conceptions of Reason
4.4 Kant on the Primacy of Practical Reason

5 Cognitive and Moral Virtue
5.1 Posing the Question
5.2 Kant and Contemporary Virtue Epistemology
5.3 Healthy Understanding as Good Epistemic Character
5.4 Natural and Moral Perfection in the Doctrine of Virtue
5.5 Conclusion

6 Virtue as a Skill
6.1 Introduction
6.2 The Focal Passage
6.3 Kant on Skill
6.4 Free Skills, Reflection and Dialectical Activities
6.5 Kant contra Mendelssohn on Virtue as a Skill
6.6 Virtue as a Skill

7 The Cognitive Basis of Moral Virtue
7.1 Introduction
7.2 Virtue as ‘Strength’
7.3 The Skill Model in the Tugendlehre
7.4 Practical Knowledge and the Independence of Objects
7.5 Self-Determination through Understanding

References

Index