UNDER CAESAR'S SWORD

The global persecution of Christians is an urgent human rights issue that remains underreported. This volume presents the results of the first systematic global investigation into how Christians respond to persecution. World-class scholars of global Christianity present first-hand research from sites of harsh persecution as well as from the West and Latin America. Their findings make clear the nature of persecution, the reasons for it, Christian responses to it – both nonviolent and confrontational – and the effects of these responses. Motivating the volume is the hope that this knowledge will empower all who would exercise solidarity with the world's persecuted Christians and will offer the victims strategies for a more effective response. This book is written for anyone concerned about the persecution of Christians or more generally about the human right of religious freedom, including scholars, activists, political and religious leaders, and those who work for international organizations.

Daniel Philpott is Professor of Political Science at the University of Notre Dame.

Timothy Samuel Shah is Director for International Research at the Religious Freedom Research Project of the Berkley Center for Religion, Peace, and World Affairs at Georgetown University, in Washington, DC. He is also Research Professor of Government at Baylor University's Institute for Studies of Religion and Senior Director of the South and Southeast Asia Action Team with the Religious Freedom Institute.

The Law and Christianity series publishes cutting-edge work on Catholic, Protestant, and Orthodox Christian contributions to public, private, penal, and procedural law and legal theory. The series aims to promote deep Christian reflection by leading scholars on the fundamentals of law and politics, to build further ecumenical legal understanding across Christian denominations, and to link and amplify the diverse and sometimes isolated Christian legal voices and visions at work in the academy. Works collected by the series include groundbreaking monographs, historical and thematic anthologies, and translations by leading scholars around the globe.

Acknowledgments

This volume is the fruit of a collaborative scholarly project, Under Caesar's Sword: Christian Response to Persecution, which the Templeton Religion Trust funded through a generous grant in summer 2014. The project began as a partnership between the University of Notre Dame, where it is now based at the Center for Ethics and Culture, and the Religious Freedom Project (now the Religious Freedom Research Project) at the Berkley Center for Religion, Peace, and World Affairs at Georgetown University. In the support and production of this volume, the Religious Freedom Research Project remained a partner. On other aspects of the project, including the production of a documentary film, a report of major findings and policy recommendations, a policy conference, and a curriculum for use in seminaries and congregational settings, the Religious Freedom Institute in Washington, DC, became a primary partner, contributing significant expertise and staff support. The Kellogg Institute and the Nanovic Institute at the University of Notre Dame contributed financial resources, while the Center for Civil and Human Rights at Notre Dame contributed staff support. Contributing generous financial support and expertise at various points, particularly in organizing the “Under Caesar’s Sword” policy conference in April 2017 in Washington, DC, was Aid to the Church in Need, USA, under the leadership of George Marlin, Sarkis Boghjalian, and Joop Koopman. The authors of the chapters herein first presented the results of their research at “Under Caesar’s Sword: An International Conference on Christian Response to Persecution” in Rome, Italy, on December 10–12, 2015.

The editors are grateful to all of the people in these various partnerships who played an instrumental role. Chris Stewart, Vice President, Grant Programs at TRT, supported the project with constancy and enthusiasm. Indispensable, too, were two outstanding project managers, Zahra Vieneuve and Kristin Haas, who worked untiringly to help organize and support the research and the writing for the book as well as the Rome conference and other events at which the research was presented. At the Religious Freedom Institute, Jeremy Barker and Abigail Galván provided constant support and expert counsel, as did Nicholas Fedyk at the Religious Freedom Research Project. We thank Britta Eastburg for excellent copyediting and Cheryl Lenser for indexing. Thomas Farr, President of the Religious Freedom Institute, Kent Hill, Executive Director of the Religious Freedom Institute, and Carter Snead, Director of the Center for Ethics and Culture, stood behind the project unflinchingly, for which we extend our gratitude. Thomas Banchoff, Vice President for Global Engagement at Georgetown University and the Berkley Center Director when the project was first conceived and launched, was also a consistent source of support and good counsel. We are grateful, too, for the patience and encouragement of our wives – Diana Philpott and Rebecca Samuel Shah – and of our children – Angela, James, and Peter, and Miriam, Joshua, Joseph, David, and Solomon.

We wish to dedicate the book to the courageous witnesses recounted in these pages – and many, many more we could not name – who testify even “under Caesar’s sword” to the constant and unquenchable character of God’s love.
