

PERFORMING ENDURANCE

In Performing Endurance, Lara Shalson offers a new way of understanding acts of endurance in art and political contexts. Examining a range of performances from the 1960s to the present, including influential performance art works by Marina Abramović, Chris Burden, Tehching Hsieh, Linda Montano, Yoko Ono, and others, as well as protest actions from the lunch counter sit-ins of the US civil rights movement to protest camps in the twenty-first century, this book provides a formal account of endurance and illuminates its ethical and political significance. Endurance, Shalson argues, raises vital questions about what it means to exist as a body that both acts and is acted upon, from ethical questions about how we respond to the bodies of others to political questions about how we live in relation to institutions that shape life in fundamental ways. In addition, Performing Endurance rethinks how performance itself endures over time.

LARA SHALSON is Lecturer in Theatre and Performance Studies at King's College London. She is the author of Theatre & Protest (2017).

Acknowledgments

Anyone who has done it, or supported someone else through it, will know that writing a book can feel like an act of endurance. I am indebted to various people and institutions who have supported me in this endeavor. The idea for this book was formulated during my time as a doctoral student at the University of California, Berkeley. I want to thank Shannon Jackson, whose challenging questions and insightful comments guided the early development of this work and whose encouragement helped me to carry it through to completion. I also want to thank Kaja Silverman and Linda Williams, whose invaluable feedback further shaped this research in its initial stages. All three provided me with models of intellectual generosity that I continue to aspire toward. In addition, I am grateful to several other teachers and mentors who influenced my thinking in lasting ways: Judith Butler, Ann Pellegrini, Peggy Phelan, Anne Wagner, and William B. Worthen. At Berkeley, I was fortunate to be surrounded by brilliant graduate students in performance studies, rhetoric, film, and art history. Thank you in particular to Patrick Anderson, Elise Archias, Renu Cappelli, Beth Hoffmann, Tung Hui Hu, Laura Levin, and Monica Stufft for being a source of inspiration then and now.

A number of people have left their mark on this work in the intervening years. Though she is mentioned elsewhere in these acknowledgments, Lis Austin deserves thanks here first of all. She was my go-to reader when these words were at their most vulnerable, and her ability to understand what I meant even when I was having trouble articulating it helped me to see the path more clearly. I have also benefited enormously from feedback from Tracy C. Davis, Maria Delgado, and Rebecca Schneider, who each read the manuscript at different points in its development. Alan Read and Catherine Silverstone also read sections and offered me valuable suggestions, and Adrian Heathfield gave me advice on a draft of my proposal that helped me to frame the project more persuasively. In addition, my thanks go to the anonymous readers whose comments helped me to improve this book. One of these, I subsequently found out, was the inimitable Dominic Johnson, to whom I am grateful for the generous praise that appears on the cover. Students in my graduate seminar on Performance and Live Art, and audiences at the Goldsmith's Visual Cultures Guest Lecture Series, London Theatre Seminar, Queen Mary University of London's Quorum Seminar Series, the National University of Singapore's Performance Research Seminar, Performance Studies international, the American Society for Theatre Research, and the Performing Documents Conference at Bristol's Arnolfini also contributed to my thinking about this work. I am thankful to the organizers of these events for their invitations and hospitality.

A wider group of people have sustained my life and work since I moved to the United Kingdom. I am lucky to work with wonderful colleagues at King's College London. Kéline Gotman, Alan Read, Theron Schmidt, and Harriet Curtis have made King's a vibrant place to do performance research. Bob Mills, Mark Turner, and especially Jane Elliott have made the English department feel like home. As heads of department, Josephine McDonagh and Richard Kirkland provided me with generous research support and advice. Further afield, I have been privileged to be part of an extended community of theatre and performance studies scholars in the United Kingdom and abroad. In addition to those already named, my thanks go to Gavin Butt, Jill Dolan, Jen Harvie, Aoife Monks, Louise Owen, Paul Rae, and Heike Roms, who have enriched my working life in various ways. Thanks especially to my South London community: Joshua Abrams, Jennifer Parker-Starbuck, Shane Boyle, Morgan Wadsworth-Boyle, Bryce Lease, Martin Schnabl, Elyssa Livergant, Catherine Silverstone, and Julia Cort.

Thank you to Kate Brett for believing in this project and to the team at Cambridge University Press for their guidance through the production process. Part of Chapter 4 was previously published as "Enduring Documents: Re-Documentation in Marina Abramović's Seven Easy Pieces," in Contemporary Theatre Review 23:3 (2013); it is reproduced in revised form here with permission. My admiration and gratitude goes to all of the artists, activists, and scholars whose work I have engaged with in these pages; without your provocations, this book would not have been written. Thank you to everyone who allowed me to use their images, and to Tehching Hsieh in particular, who generously provided the beautiful photograph for the cover.

I want to end by expressing my gratitude to my family. Thank you to my parents, Vaughan and Solange Shalson, who always encouraged me to pursue my goals, even when it meant moving 6,000 miles away. Their own curiosity about the world has inspired me, their love has bolstered me, and their sense of humor has kept me going. I am also immensely grateful to my brother, Axel Shalson, who has supported me in numerous ways. Our conversations about art and life continue to energize my thinking and to remind me of what really matters. Finally, my endless thanks to Lis Austin, who endured this journey with me.
