The mouth, responsible for both physical and spiritual functions – eating, drinking, breathing, praying and confessing – was of immediate importance to medieval thinking about the nature of the human being. Where scholars have traditionally focused on the mouth’s grotesque excesses, Katie L. Walter argues for the recuperation of its material ‘everyday’ aspect. Walter’s original study draws on two rich archives: one comprising Middle English theology (Langland, Julian of Norwich, Lydgate, Chaucer) and pastoral writings; the other broadly medical and surgical, including learned encyclopaedias and vernacular translations and treatises. Challenging several critical orthodoxies about the centrality of sight, the hierarchy of the senses and the separation of religious from medical discourses, the book reveals the centrality of the mouth, taste and touch to human modes of knowing and to Christian identity.

Dr Katie L. Walter is Senior Lecturer in Medieval English Literature at the University of Sussex. She is the editor of Reading Skin in Medieval Literature and Culture (2013), The Culture of Inquisition in Medieval England (with Mary Flannery, 2013) and a special issue of Textual Practice on ‘Prosthesis in Medieval and Early Modern Culture’ (with Chloe Porter and Margaret Healy, 2016). Dr Walter has published essays on the body, skin, flesh and the senses, as well as on medieval literary theories and reading practices.
This series of critical books seeks to cover the whole area of literature written in the major medieval languages – the main European vernaculars, and medieval Latin and Greek – during the period c.1100–1500. Its chief aim is to publish and stimulate fresh scholarship and criticism on medieval literature, special emphasis being placed on understanding major works of poetry, prose and drama in relation to the contemporary culture and learning which fostered them.

Recent Titles in the Series

Lee Manion
Narrating the Crusades: Loss and Recovery in Medieval and Early Modern English Literature

Daniel Wakelin
Scribal Correction and Literary Craft: English Manuscripts 1350–1530

Jon Whitman (ed.)
Romance and History: Imagining Time from the Medieval to the Early Modern Period

Virginia Greene
Logical Fictions in Medieval Literature and Philosophy

Michael Johnston and Michael Van Dussen (eds.)
The Medieval Manuscript Book: Cultural Approaches

Tim William Machan (ed.)
Imagining Medieval English: Language Structures and Theories, 500–1500

Eric Weiskott
English Alliterative Verse: Poetic Tradition and Literary History

Sarah Elliott Novacich
Shaping the Archive in Late Medieval England: History, Poetry, and Performance

Geoffrey Russom
The Evolution of Verse Structure in Old and Middle English Poetry: From the Earliest Alliterative Poems to Iambic Pentameter

Ian Cornelius
Reconstructing Alliterative Verse: The Pursuit of a Medieval Meter

Sarah Harris
The Linguistic Past in Twelfth-Century Britain

Erik Kwakkel and Rodney Thomson (eds.)
The European Book in the Twelfth Century

Irina Dumitrescu
The Experience of Education in Anglo-Saxon Literature

Jonas Wellendorf
Gods and Humans in Medieval Scandinavia: Retying the Bonds

Thomas A. Prendergast and Jessica Rosenfeld (eds.)
Chaucer and the Subversion of Form

Katie L. Walter
Middle English Mouths

A complete list of titles in the series can be found at the end of the volume.
For my family
Contents

Acknowledgements   page ix
List of Abbreviations     xi

Introduction: Everyday Mouths     1
1   Natural Knowledge     21
2   The Reading Lesson     47
3   Tasting, Eating and Knowing     78
4   The Epistemology of Kissing     115
5   Surgical Habits     144

Notes     173
Bibliography     226
Index     246
Acknowledgements

This book's story has journeyed with me for longer, and to more places, than I had ever expected – from its first beginnings in a conversation with Felicity Riddy at York, through a PhD at King's College, Cambridge, then off over the Channel to be rethought in the industrial heartland of Germany, before finding its final form – in between steadying stints in Cambridge libraries and (less steadying ones) in an Alaskan brewery – comfortably nestled in the Sussex Downs. I am grateful to many whose paths I have crossed and who have cheered and helped and goaded along the way.

My thanks to Cambridge University Press and the two anonymous readers whose comments were valuable in helping me re-envision the scope of this project. Thanks are also due to Jacqueline Tasioulas (my doctoral supervisor) and Nicolette Zeeman. Conversations with Nicky about Langland, nature and the body have shaped the thinking in this book in ways more profound than can be footnoted. I owe much to her generosity, support and encouragement.

Others have given benevolently of their time and expertise, including Christopher Cannon, Helen Cooper, Edwin Craun, Isabel Davis, Luuk Houwen, Peter Murray Jones, Robert Mills, Richard Newhauser, Jean-Pascal Pouzet, Susan Powell, Elizabeth Robertson and Barry Windeatt, as well as Tom Healy and Margaret Healy and my colleagues in the Centre for Early Modern and Medieval Studies at Sussex. There have been many who have brightened library tearooms with conversation, enlivened conferences or offered hospitality, including Daisy Hay, Virginia Langum, Ruth Ahnert and Sebastian Ahnert. Daniel DiCenso and Eva and Christian von Contzen have provided invaluable Latin expertise, from which my translations have greatly benefited, as well as friendship. Mary Flannery, who has been an excellent friend and collaborator, has read and reread substantial portions of this book: thank you.

Long before this book’s beginnings, my parents, David and Christine Walter, were my greatest and longest-suffering supporters. They remain so, and the ways they have helped and encouraged me are countless. Without them the journey would have been longer and harder. I am grateful to Natalie and Luke Cathie for a place to stay, to Melodie Walter for continental jaunts and to all three of them for laughter and distractions.
Acknowledgements

James Wade has been a patient and expert reader, a wise and incisive interlocuter and an uncomplaining maker of coffee and bringer of treats. More than this, he is the very best of travelling companions. Edith Constance, who slept in my arms as I finished this book, will undoubtedly make our next journey both sweeter and noisier. I dedicate this book to my family, with love.
Abbreviations

EETS Early English Text Society
MED Middle English Dictionary
NML New Medieval Literatures
N&Q Notes & Queries
(Paris, 1844–64)
YLS Yearbook of Langland Studies