Acknowledgements

Dr. Moutier:

I'd like to acknowledge my colleagues who have laid much of the scientific foundation for the clinical guidance provided in this handbook. For providing me with personal encouragement and inspiration, and for your deep and longstanding dedication to suicide prevention, I am grateful for each of you – Drs. Sidney Zisook, Yeates Conwell, Maria Oquendo, John Mann, Jill Harkavy-Friedman, Doreen Marshall, David Brent, Joan Asarnow, Barbara Stanley, Greg Brown, Dave Jobes, Jerry Rosenbaum, Gretchen Haas, Peter Marzuk, Gary Kennedy, Kathy Shear, Lisa Horowitz, Maddy Gould, David Gunnell, Gil Zalsman, Caitlin Ryan, Rory O'Connor, David Covington, Emmy Betz, Guy Diamond. To the many patients, trainees, colleagues, friends, and family who have opened yourselves up and disclosed your suicidal struggles and experiences of loss – I have learned from you even as I have tried my best to use my own clinical and lived experience to support you. To my colleague, Alex McRae, thank you for providing immeasurable support in preparation of this manuscript. And to my co-authors: Dr. Tony Pisani, I needed your deep expertise in primary care and as an NIH-funded developer and evaluator of suicide prevention efforts across many clinical settings. I appreciate that you were game to collaborate. Lastly, Dr. Stephen Stahl, your generous partnership and desire to help clinicians prevent suicide has been genuinely evident – thank you.

Dr. Pisani:

I would like to acknowledge my close collaborator, Kristina Mossgraber, lived experience faculty at SafeSide Prevention and one of the coolest people I know. Things Kristina has said or taught me permeate every page I wrote. My longtime editor and friend, Paul Scade, helped me capture both the skills and the heart behind the clinical framework I use and teach. I'm grateful for this author team. Christine Moutier is on a mission. Gifted communicator, brilliant strategist, and wise confidante, Christine inspires me every time we're together. Steve Stahl has a knack for understanding and providing exactly what health professionals need to do our job better. It was a privilege
