Solidarity in Practice

Cross-border solidarity has captured the interest and imagination of scholars, activists, and a range of political actors in such contested areas as the US–Mexico border and Guantánamo Bay. Chandra Russo examines how justice-seeking solidarity drives activist communities contesting US torture, militarism, and immigration policies. Through compelling and fresh ethnographic accounts, Russo follows these activists as they engage in unusual and high-risk forms of activism (fasting, pilgrimage, civil disobedience). She explores their ideas of solidarity and witnessing, which are central to how the activists explain their activities. This book adds to our understanding of solidarity activism under new global arrangements and illuminates the features of movement activity that deepen activists’ commitment by helping their lives feel more humane, just, and meaningful. Based on participant observation, interviews, surveys, and hundreds of courtroom statements, Russo develops a new theorization of solidarity that will take a central place in social movement studies.

Chandra Russo is an Assistant Professor of Sociology at Colgate University, where she teaches courses in social movements, activism, and anti-racism. Before earning her PhD from the University of California, Santa Barbara, she spent several years working on immigrant justice issues in New York State, Central Mexico, and Colorado. Her research and writing on these matters has been published in numerous venues, including Mobilization, Race & Class, Interface, and the Denver Post.
Solidarity in Practice

Moral Protest and the US Security State

CHANDRA RUSSO

Colgate University, New York
Contents

List of Figures  page vii
Acknowledgments  ix

1 “Not Free to Be Completely Human”  1
2 “I’m Ruined for Life!” Witnessing Empire  30
3 Ritual Protest as Testimony  66
4 The Visceral Logics of Embodied Resistance  97
5 Ascetic Practice and Prefigurative Community  123
6 The Complications of Solidarity Witness  153
7 “Knowing Things Impossible to Un-know”  179

Methodological Appendix  185
Bibliography  189
Index  203
Figures

1.1 WAT protester, 2013 page 3
1.2 SOA Watch at Fort Benning, 2013 8
1.3 Migrant Trail in Buenos Aires Refuge, 2015 9
1.4 WAT protesters at National Mall, 2014 11
3.1 SOA Watch mourners at Fort Benning, 2013 67
3.2 Migrant Trail at Sasabe Church, 2015 72
3.3 WAT performance in front of Union Station, 2014 79
3.4 WAT inside Union Station, 2014 80
3.5 Migrant Trail crosses at Kennedy Park, 2015 90
3.6 WAT at American History Museum, 2014 93
4.1 Migrant Trail on Highway 286, 2016 98
4.2 Migrant Trail foot care, 2015 100
4.3 WAT returns to Cuba, 2015 115
5.1 Arrest of WAT protester at White House, 2012 139
5.2 Migrant Trail campsite, 2015 145
Acknowledgments

This book is most centrally indebted to the communities of struggle I have had the privilege to be a part of and to document. My dear friends on the Migrant Trail left an indelible mark on me long before I decided to pursue a PhD or to include them in this study. Over the past five years, participants with School of the Americas Watch and Witness Against Torture have also touched me in transformative and enduring ways. The kindness, hospitality, and camaraderie I found in these groups have made this project not only possible but also a joy to pursue. I hope to have offered some semblance of justice to their efforts and vision.

I am thankful to the several faculty mentors at the University of California at Santa Barbara who shepherded me through this project. Verta Taylor equipped me to enter into the scholarly conversation on social movements as no one else could have. Howard Winant pushed me toward more assertive argumentation and proved an indefatigable advocate at every turn. Avery Gordon’s probing inquiries and astute observations helped me to forge ahead with clarity and enthusiasm, especially during the murkier stages of writing. George Lipsitz embraced this project with enthusiasm since its most modest inception and patiently accompanied me for the next several years, always with an uncanny sense of where the book was headed.

In moving toward publication, I am immensely grateful to Suzanne Staggenborg, who believed this book might find a home at Cambridge University Press, and Senior Editor Robert Dreesen, who agreed. Feedback from the anonymous reviewers at Cambridge University Press allowed me to further hone the book’s purpose and situate it more clearly within the social movements literature. I am also thankful to series editor David S. Meyer for giving the entirety of the manuscript a meticulous and encouraging review.

As I endeavored to complete this project, I have had the great fortune of Catherine Corrigall-Brown’s sage advice, kindness, and perspective. My heartfelt appreciation also goes to colleagues in the Department of Sociology and Anthropology at Colgate University, who have provided a most nurturing environment as I put the finishing touches on this book.

Some stunning photographs enrich these pages. I am grateful to Justin Norman of Witness Against Torture and Eric O. Ledermann with the Migrant Trail Walk, who have so deftly captured the work, the struggle, and the soul of their respective groups. I also thank photojournalist Christina Felschen for images taken on the Migrant Trail Walk in 2016.

Various funding opportunities at the University of California at Santa Barbara allowed me to undertake data collection for this research. These include monies from the Department of Sociology, the Flacks Fund for the Study of Democratic Possibilities, the UC Center for New Racial Studies, the Humanities and Social Sciences Grant, the Interdisciplinary Humanities Center, and the Mendell Graduate Fellowship in Cultural Literacy. At Colgate University, grant monies from the Social Sciences Division and the Research Council allowed me to bring this project to completion.

At Cambridge University Press, more people have helped on design, copy-editing, outreach, and the daily grind than I could hope to adequately thank. They include but surely exceed: Meera Seth, Joshua Penney, Robert Judkins, Stephanie Taylor, Jackie Grant, Abirami Ulaganathan, and Indra Priyadarshini. I also thank Amron Gravett of Wildclover Book Services for her careful and diligent indexing.

While this project owes its existence to these activists, scholar-mentors, institutional support, and production team, my family gives me a continual sense of purpose, especially when our global condition appears dreary and dark. My life partner, Andy Pattison, models the best of what it means to be civically engaged, to not let perfect ideals get in the way of good works. I count his boundless talents, intellect, humor, and love among my life’s greatest treasures. I am infinitely grateful that we get to walk side by side on this journey, which recently included the joyous arrival of our sweet Sabine.