

Contents

Acknowledgements	page ix
A Note on Translations and References	xiii
Introduction	I
1 Intellectual Politics and the Crisis of Democracy	21
Philosophy and Politics in the Late Third Republic	26
Aron's Early Political Development	29
Critiquing the Intellectual Politics of the 1930s	38
Conclusion	46
2 History and Politics	49
Dilthey, Heidegger, and the Phenomenology of Self-Knowledge	53
Towards an Historical Sociology	61
Politics and the Historical Condition	66
Conclusion	73
3 Antitotalitarianism	77
Élie Halévy and the Origins of Aron's Theory of Totalitarianism	79
Democratic States and Totalitarian States	84
Secular Religion	96
Emergence of a Cold Warrior	103
The Limitations of Antitotalitarianism	109
Conclusion	117
4 The End of Ideology	120
Aron at the Margins of Neo-socialism and Neo-liberalism	122
Planning for Postwar Democratic Renewal	132
The End of Ideology and the Congress for Cultural Freedom	136
A Liberal Retreat from Empire?	141
Political Theory at the End of Ideology	151
Conclusion	162

viii	Contents
5	Raymond Aron and the French Liberal Tradition	167
	Deconstructing the 'French School of Political Sociology'	171
	The Effacement of Célestin Bouglé	178
	The Sociological Reception of Montesquieu from Comte to the Durkheimians	184
	Aron's Interpretation of Montesquieu	190
	Aron's Interpretation of Tocqueville	199
	Conclusion	204
6	Raymond Aron and the Liberal Moment in Late Twentieth-Century French Thought	207
	Antitotalitarianism and the Return of 'the Political'	209
	Contrepoint, Commentaire , and Anti-68 Liberalism	217
	Anti-68 Liberal Revivalism in Comparative Perspective	222
	Conclusion	229
	Conclusion	235
	Select Bibliography	246
	Index	286