CONTENTS

Foreword  page xi
Acknowledgements  xiii

Introduction  1

1 Catholic Cosmopolitanism and the Birth of Human Rights  10
  1.1 Some Historical Origins of Catholic Social Thought  10
     1.1.1 From Whom Are We to Seek a Judgement on this Great Question? From Whom? From Mankind  13
     1.1.2 ‘The Error of the Century’  21
     1.1.3 The Spirit of Revolutionary Change, which Has Long Been Disturbing the Nations  27
  1.2 Cosmopolitan Foundations  33
     1.2.1 ‘Mandatory for the Whole Church’  33
     1.2.2 A Kind of Subjective Power  36
     1.2.3 The Radical Freedom that Is Ours at Each Moment  42
     1.2.4 The Final Product of a Developing Tradition of Thought  49
  1.3 An Independent Ethical Category  51
     1.3.1 Transcending Individuality  55
  1.4 A Fateful Step for Post-War Intellectual History  57
  1.5 Conclusion  65

2 Catholic Cosmopolitanism from the Centre to the Periphery  68
  2.1 ‘Two Swords There Are, August Emperor’  70
     2.1.1 ‘We Have Learnt that There Is a City of God: And We Have Longed to Become Citizens of that City’  72
     2.1.2 Every City Is a Community of Some Kind  78
     2.1.3 ‘The Court over the Whole of Christendom’  81

vii
CONTENTS

2.1.4 ‘The Whole World, Which Is in a Sense a Commonwealth’  91
2.1.5 ‘This Title against the Barbarians Is Also Invalid’  98
2.1.6 ‘Dominium Is Not Founded in Grace or Faith, but in Free Will and Reason’  99
2.2 Classical Jurists, Roman Civil Law, Ancient Philosophers  103
2.2.1 Where Only Beasts and Heroes Could Exist  106
2.2.2 ‘[N]ull, void, invalid, iniquitous, unjust, damnable, reprobate, inane’  111
2.3 Conclusion  115

3 Catholic Cosmopolitanism from the Periphery to International Concern  121
3.1 The ‘Standard of Civilisation’  123
3.1.1 Religion in the Political Raison d’État of Western States  127
3.1.2 ‘The General Happiness of Mankind’  131
3.1.3 ‘A Long Established Technical Vocabulary’  133
3.2 A ‘Plan of Action’  139
3.2.1 ‘More Pope More Sovereignty, More Sovereignty More Unity’  146
3.2.2 A Revolt against the Gods of the Roman Empire  154
3.3 ‘The Pope! How Many Divisions Has He?’  167
3.3.1 Legitimate Participants of the Modern Diplomatic System  168
3.3.2 Not as Privileges, but as Bilateral Treaties  171
3.3.3 A True Brotherly Society of Nations  175
3.4 To Find or to Create a Law which Is Higher than the Law of the State  179
3.5 Conclusion  186

4 Locating a Modern Christian Cosmopolitanism  187
4.1 A Prisca Theologia or Primitive Anticipation of Christianity  187
4.1.1 A Philosophia Perennis  195
4.1.2 The Juridical Concept of Human Dignity  197
4.2 Maritain’s ‘Democratic Secular Faith’  200
4.2.1 UNESCO Document and the Universal Declaration of Human Rights  206
4.2.2 A New Religiously Pluralistic Ideal of Church–State Relations  209
4.3 Conclusion  216
CONTENTS

5 An Imperfect Cosmopolitan Project 218
   5.1 Irish Constitutionalism and Human Dignity  218
      5.1.1 Context of the Irish Constitution  218
      5.1.2 Constitutional Dignity, a Cosmopolitan Impulse  221
      5.1.3 A Peripheral Laboratory of Civil Society Catholicism  223
      5.1.4 Two Methodologies  224
   5.2 Cosmopolitan and Consociational Democracy  227
      5.2.1 'Petit livre rouge' of a Whole Generation  236
   5.3 The Pope Was 'Becoming a Socialist’  241
   5.4 Conclusion  258

Conclusion  260

Papal Documents Cited  269
Select Bibliography  272
Index  288