

Contents

List of Illustrations [ix]
Acknowledgements [xv]

Introduction [1]

- 1 A Shifting Relationship: From Literary Geography to Critical
Literary Mapping [16]
 - The Origins of Literary Geography [16]
 - Literary Geography or Literary Cartography? [25]
 - Critical Cartography [28]
 - Critical Literary Mapping [33]
 - Material Juxtaposition: Map and Text [36]
- 2 Historicising the Fictional Map [44]
 - Early Pictorial Maps [45]
 - Mapping Utopia; Mapping Dystopia [49]
 - Mapping the New World [57]
 - Itinerary Maps: Paris, Ogilby, Bunyan [66]
 - Accurate Maps: Mapping the Nation [74]
 - Accurate Maps: Mapping Empire [81]
 - Ending Where We Began [87]
- 3 Doubleness and Silence in Adventure and Spy Fiction [92]
 - Trusting the Fictional Map: Accuracy and Use Value [94]
 - Cartographic Silence [104]
 - The Authenticity of the Fictional Map [108]
 - From Adventure Story to Spy Fiction [114]
 - Integrative Cartography in The Riddle of the Sands* [116]
 - Double Meanings; Double Intentions [123]
- 4 Mapping Murder [127]
 - The Origins of Maps in Detective Fiction [128]
 - Mapping Crime Scenes [130]
 - Theorising Detection [138]
 - Trusting and Not Trusting the Map [143]
 - Human Geometry [151]

- 5 Playspace: Spatialising Children's Fiction [164]
 Spatialising Children's Fiction [165]
 The Lakes As Playspace [169]
 A Material and Visual Playspace [175]
 Referential or Non-referential? [181]
 Returning to Rousseau [186]
 Mapping Negative Playspace [191]
- 6 Mapping Worlds: Tolkien's Cartographic Imagination [199]
 What to Do First [199]
 'Each Is Both Prior to the Other and Later Than It' [203]
 Writing and Mapping: Rivers and Roads [206]
Multiple Mapping in The Lord of the Rings [220]
 Mapping and Not Mapping [226]
 Post-authorial Re-mapping [228]
- 7 Fearing the Map: Representational Priorities and Referential Assumptions [237]
 Reasons for the Absence of Maps [239]
 Fearing Illustration [244]
 Realist Principles and the Absent Map [248]
 Why a Map Is Not an Illustration [250]
 Mapping Realism: Trollope [253]
 Mapping Realism: Hardy [262]
 Hardy and Trollope [265]
The Earliest Map: Return of the Native [267]
- 8 Reading As Mapping, or, What Cannot Be Visualised [273]
 Spatialising Reader-Response Theory [277]
 Conscious Memory Mapping [279]
 Two Forms for the Internal Map: Route and Locale [283]
 The Cognitive Mapping of Literature [290]
 Mapping Literature in Digital Space [296]
 'Let Us Pretend That It Is the End' [305]
- Bibliography* [307]
Index [327]

Colour plates can be found between pages 144 and 145