

Utopia and Civilisation in the Arab Nahda

Exploring the ‘Nahda’, a cultural renaissance in the Arab world responding to massive social change, this study presents a crucial and often overlooked part of the Arab world’s encounter with global capitalist modernity, an interaction which reshaped the Middle East over the course of the long nineteenth century.

Seeing themselves as part of an expanding capitalist civilisation, Arab intellectuals approached the changing world of the mid-nineteenth century with confidence and optimism, imagining utopian futures for their own civilising projects. By analysing the works of crucial writers of the period, including Butrus al-Bustani and Rifa‘a al-Tahtawi, alongside lesser-known figures such as the prolific journalist Khalil al-Khuri and the utopian visionary Fransis Marrash of Aleppo, Peter Hill places these visions within the context of their local class- and state-building projects in Ottoman Syria and Egypt, which themselves formed part of a global age of capital. By illuminating this little-studied early period of the Arab Nahda movement, Hill places the transformation of the Arab region within the context of world history, inviting us to look beyond the well-worn categories of ‘traditional’ versus ‘modern’.

PETER HILL is a Vice Chancellor’s Research Fellow in History at Northumbria University, Newcastle-upon-Tyne; previously, he was based at Christ Church, University of Oxford. An intellectual and cultural historian of the Arab world in the long nineteenth century, he has lived and studied in Syria, Lebanon and Egypt. He has published articles in journals including Past & Present, Journal of Arabic Literature and Intellectual History Review.

Acknowledgements

To conceive of a study of Arab utopias in 2011 and complete it only in 2019 is to invite a certain irony. First sketched out during a moment of revolutionary aspiration in several Arab countries, this book has been written largely in the shade of the violent repression that formed that moment's aftermath. It bears, nonetheless, the marks of its first origin; and my first acknowledgement must be a tribute to the courage and vision of the utopians of 2011.

This book has benefited from the generous assistance of many colleagues and friends, at many stages of its development. I owe particular thanks to Robin Ostle, who guided my first steps in the study of the Arab Nahda; and to Mohamed-Salah Omri, who supervised the doctoral thesis from which this book derives. For discussing the project's themes, reading sections of the manuscript, or sharing their own unpublished work, I would like to thank Maha Abdel Megeed, Şeyma Afacan, Nader Atassi, Nora Barakat, Nadia Bou Ali, Anthony Edwards, Chihab El Khachab, Khaled Fahmy, Zachary Foster, Israel Gershoni, Jens Hanssen, Beth Holt, Joanna Innes, Rana Issa, Aaron Jakes, Ceyda Karamursel, Nicole Khayat, Ilham Khuri-Makdisi, Hilary Kilpatrick, Feras Krimsti, Christine Lindner, Ussama Makdisi, Adam Mestyan, Helen Pfeifer, Claire Savina, Kathryn Schwartz, Hannah Scott Deuchar, Samah Selim, Johannes Stephan, Einar Wigen, and Florian Zemmin. I am especially grateful to Marilyn Booth and Hussein Omar for the encouragement, advice, and companionship they offered me throughout the writing of the book.

The completion of this project has been enabled by the financial support of two Oxford colleges: Christ Church, where I have been a Junior Research Fellow during the writing of the book itself in 2015–19; and St John's, where I wrote the doctoral dissertation on which it was based in 2012–15. I gratefully acknowledge, too, the financial contributions made to this doctoral project by the Arts and Humanities Research Council (UK), and by the drinkers in the Lamb &

Flag pub who (I suspect unwittingly) funded my St John's College Lamb & Flag Scholarship. Especial thanks are due to the Institut français du Proche-Orient, Beirut, for the hospitality it extended to me in 2013–14.

I received much valuable help during my research from staff at the Bodleian Libraries in Oxford, particularly at the libraries of the Oriental Institute and the Middle East Centre, St Antony's College; at the Jafet Library of the American University of Beirut, especially Dr Kaoukab Chebaro and her team in the Archives and Special Collections Department; at Dār al-Kutub al-Qawmiyya in Cairo; at the Historical Archive of the Sacra Congregazione de Propaganda Fide in Rome; and at the Houghton Library, Harvard University. I am indebted to all those at Cambridge University Press who have worked on the book, particularly the Commissioning Editor, Maria Marsh, the two anonymous readers, and the copy-editor, Chris Bond.

Finally, I am deeply grateful to my parents, Nick and Kate Hill, and to my partner Georgina Brooke, for their love and support over the years.

Note on Transliteration, Dates and Abbreviations

Arabic text and names are transliterated using the conventions of the International Journal of Middle East Studies. All translations, except where otherwise noted, are my own; the Arabic originals of many of the passages can be found in my doctoral thesis, ‘Utopia and Civilisation in the Arab Nahda’ (University of Oxford, 2016). All dates are given in their hijrī (AD) form. In Chapter 4, the abbreviation GĤA refers to the 1865 Aleppo edition of Fransīs Marrāsh’s Gĥābat al-Ĥaqq; GĤB refers to its 1881 Beirut edition.
