

Women and Gender in Early Modern Europe

This fourth edition of Merry E. Wiesner-Hanks's prize-winning survey features significant changes to every chapter, designed to reflect the newest scholarship. Global issues have been threaded throughout the book, while still preserving the clear thematic structure of previous editions. Thus readers will find expanded discussions of gendered racial hierarchies, migration, missionaries, and consumer goods. In addition, there is enhanced coverage of recent theoretical directions; the ideas, beliefs, and practices of ordinary people; early industrialization; women's learning, letter writing, and artistic activities; emotions and sentiments; single women and same-sex relations; masculinities; mixed-race and enslaved women; and the life course from birth to death. With geographically broad coverage, including Russia, Scandinavia, the Ottoman Empire, and the Iberian Peninsula, this remains the leading text on women and gender in Europe in this period.

Accompanying this essential reading is a completely revised website featuring extensive updated bibliographies, web links, and primary source material.

Merry E. Wiesner-Hanks is a Distinguished Professor of History and Women's and Gender Studies at the University of Wisconsin–Milwaukee. She is the senior editor of the Sixteenth Century Journal, an editor of the Journal of Global History, the editor-in-chief of the seven-volume Cambridge World History (2015), and the author or editor of thirty books and more than 100 articles or book chapters that have appeared in English, German, French, Italian, Spanish, Greek, Chinese, Turkish, and Korean. These include A Concise History of the World (2015), Early Modern Europe 1450–1789 (2013), and Gender in History: Global Perspectives (2010).

New Approaches to European History is an important textbook series, which provides concise but authoritative surveys of major themes and problems in European history since the Renaissance. Written at a level and length accessible to advanced school students and undergraduates, each book in the series addresses topics or themes that students of European history encounter daily: the series embraces both some of the more “traditional” subjects of study and those cultural and social issues to which increasing numbers of school and college courses are devoted. A particular effort is made to consider the wider international implications of the subject under scrutiny.

To aid the student reader, scholarly apparatus and annotation is light, but each work has full supplementary bibliographies and notes for further reading: where appropriate, chronologies, maps, diagrams, and other illustrative material are also provided.

Acknowledgments

A study like this that attempts to survey the entire life experience of half the European population from Spain to Scandinavia over 300 years would not be possible without the kind assistance of a huge number of people and the financial support of foundations and institutions. On the latter, I first thank the Regents of the University of Wisconsin, from whom I received a fellowship at the Institute for Research in the Humanities at the University of Wisconsin – Madison, which allowed me a year off from teaching to write the first edition of this book and subsequent sabbaticals to work on several other books whose ideas shaped the second, third, and fourth editions. Much of the information from Germany comes from my own research in libraries and archives there over the years, which was supported by grants from the Fulbright Foundation, the Deutsche Akademische Austauschdienst, and the American Council of Learned Societies. My familiarity with women's writings in many languages was enhanced by a summer at the Center for Renaissance Studies at the Newberry Library, for which I thank the Exxon Foundation. My first venture into gender history on a global scale was supported by a fellowship from the John Simon Guggenheim Foundation.

My intellectual debts are much more difficult to acknowledge adequately. Women's history has always prided itself on sisterly camaraderie and the sharing of ideas, and my own experience over the years has certainly borne this out. In the first and even second editions of this book, I tried to thank everyone by name who provided me with information and suggestions or with whom I've discussed the ideas that emerge here, but that is now impossible, as the list would go on for pages. I would still like to acknowledge the many people who willingly read and commented on drafts of chapters for the various editions: Sheila Ffolliott, Alexandra Shepard, Diana Robin, Barbara Duden, Jeffrey Merrick, Jens-Christian Johansen, Carole Shammas, Grethe Jacobsen, Suzanne Desan, Tom Broman, Susan Karant-Nunn, Jane Bowers, and David Lindbergh. I also thank a few people whose scholarship and friendship have been particularly important over the years: Darlene Abreu-Ferreira, Barbara

My inability to acknowledge everyone results from what has happened with scholarship in the field. When I first began to study women in early modern Europe, I could read everything that had been published in the field in a couple of months. Now my bookshelves groan and my file cabinets burst with a spectacular array of research, and there are several book series (Women and Gender in the Early Modern World, first published by Ashgate and now at the University of Nebraska Press, and Gendering the Late Medieval and Early Modern World, published by Amsterdam University Press), and a specialized journal (Early Modern Women: An Interdisciplinary Journal). Even surveying this research is difficult, and for this in the third and fourth editions, I relied on the assistance of two wonderful graduate students, Brice Smith and Mia Phifer. The extended and thorough bibliographies that are the results of their work can best be seen on the website that accompanies this book. As always, none of this work would have been possible without the support of my husband Neil and my sons Kai and Tyr, who have grown from infants to young men over the course of its editions. I dedicated my first book to my grandmothers in sisterhood and dedicate this one to my sons, in the hope that the world they shape will be one where gender will make less of a difference, and where cats will be cats.
