

The Cambridge Companion to Gender and the Law

To what extent is the legal subject gendered? Using illustrative examples from a range of jurisdictions and thematically organised chapters, this volume offers a comprehensive consideration of this question. With a systematic, accessible approach, it argues that law and gender work to co-produce the legal subject. Cumulatively, the volume's chapters provide a systematic evaluation of the key facets of the legal subject: the corporeal, the functional and the communal. Exploring aspects of the legal subject from the ways in which it is sexed and sexualised to its national and familial dimensions, this volume develops a complete account of the various processes through which legal orders produce gendered subjects. Across its chapters, each theoretically ambitious in its own right, this volume outlines how the law not only acts on the social world, but genders it.

Stéphanie Hennette Vauchez is Professor of Public Law at the Paris Nanterre University, Director of the CREDOF (Centre d'études et de recherches sur les droits fondamentaux) and senior member of the Institut universitaire de France. Her research focuses on conceptual issues of equality and human rights law. She has authored, co-authored and co-edited numerous journal articles, monographs and volumes. Her most recent publications include How to Democratize Europe (2019) and Droits de l'Homme et libertés fondamentales (2022).

Ruth Rubio-Marín is Professor of Constitutional Law at the University of Seville, Adjunct Professor at the School of Transnational Governance of the European University Institute, Florence, and Director of the UNIA UNESCO Chair in Human Rights and Interculturalism. Her research focuses on comparative constitutionalism, law and gender, immigration and citizenship, as well as transitional justice. Her most recent publications include Gender Parity and Multicultural Feminism: Towards a New Synthesis (2018), Women as Constitution Makers: Case Studies from the New Democratic Era (2019) and Global Gender Constitutionalism and Women's Citizenship: A Struggle for Transformative Inclusion (2022).

Márcia Nina Bernardes is Associate Professor of Law (PUC-Rio), Coordinator of the Human Rights Center (PUC-Rio), JSD (NYU School of Law), and a member of Red ALAS (Latin-American Network of Feminist Jurists). Bernardes' scholarship intersects gender, feminism, decoloniality and law. Her latest publication discusses the struggle against domestic violence in Brazil from a subaltern perspective. Her ongoing project focuses on the discussion on the possibility of feminist judgments from an anti-racist and decolonial perspective.

Marie-Xavière Catto is an assistant professor in public law at University of Paris I Pantheon-Sorbonne. Her research focuses on the limits of the economic use of the human body, bioethics, and issues of procreation and gender bicategorization from a feminist critical legal perspective. Her publications include Le principe d'indisponibilité du corps humain, limite de l'usage économique du corps (LGDJ, 2018) and La bicatégorisation de sexe: Entre droit, normes sociales et sciences biomédicales (co-edited with Julie Mazaleigue-Labaste, Mare et Martin, 2021).

Joanne Conaghan is Professor of Law at the University of Bristol. She has written extensively on issues relating to law and gender, across a range of legal sub-fields including labour law. She is author of Law and Gender (Oxford University Press, 2013).

Joanna N. Erdman is a Professor and the inaugural MacBain Chair in Health Law and Policy at the Schulich School of Law, Dalhousie University, Nova Scotia. Her research focuses on sexual and reproductive health and human rights in a transnational context. She has also acted as an intervener before various courts and international bodies. She holds a JD from the University of Toronto and an LLM from Harvard Law School, and has completed a fellowship at Yale Law School.

x List of Contributors

Stéphanie Hennette Vauchez is Professor of Public Law at Paris Nanterre University, a senior member of the Institut universitaire de France and the director of the CREDOF (Centre de recherches et d'études sur les droits fondamentaux). She has also served as a postdoctoral Fulbright Fellow at Northwestern University Law School (USA), a Marie Curie Fellow at the European University Institute (Italy) and a Law & Public Affairs Fellow at Princeton University. Her research focuses on conceptual issues of equality and human rights law. After working on bioethics for a decade, her interests turned to law and gender with particular attention to issues of religious pluralism (religious freedom and non-discrimination) as well as security issues (terrorism and states of emergency). Professor Hennette Vauchez has published extensively in all these fields. She is the author and co-author of one of the most prominent manuals of human rights law in France and a noted essay on states of emergency. She is also the co-editor of three volumes that are major francophone references on the study of gender and law: La loi & le genre: Etudes critiques de droit français (Ed. du CNRS, 2014); Ce que le genre fait au droit (Daloz, 2013); and Genre et droit: Ressources pédagogiques (Daloz, 2016).

Jonathan Herring is the DM Wolf-Clarendon Fellow in Law at Exeter College and Professor of Law at the Faculty of Law, University of Oxford. He has written extensively on issues around family law, medical law and ethics, care law and criminal law. His books include Law through the Life Course (Bristol University Press, 2021); Law and the Relational Self (Cambridge University Press, 2019); Vulnerable Adults and the Law (Oxford University Press, 2015); Caring and the Law (Hart, 2013); Older People and the Law (Oxford University Press, 2009); and (with Shazia Choudhry) European Human Rights and Family Law (Hart, 2010).

Sofia Martins is a writer, editor and researcher working at the intersection of government policy, human rights and artistic production. Her research on Brazilian cinema during the dictatorship, Amazonian development and its impact on human rights, and South American literature and history has won multiple awards, including the Mellon Mays Undergraduate Research Fellowship, and presentations at multiple conferences. In 2019, she was Columbia University's Valedictorian. Her scholarship on the Amazon secured Columbia's Doctorow Fellowship for a Masters program at the University of Oxford, which she completed in 2020.

Melissa Murray is the Frederick I. and Grace Stokes Professor of Law and Faculty Director of the Birnbaum Women's Leadership Network at NYU School of Law, and a leading expert in the fields of constitutional law, reproductive rights and justice, family law and criminal law. Prior to joining the NYU Law faculty, Murray was a professor at the University of California, Berkeley Law, and, from March 2016 to June 2017, served as interim dean of Berkeley Law. Murray's research has been published in Harvard Law Review, Yale Law Journal and Columbia Law Review, among other leading law reviews, and she regularly provides commentary for a number of lay publications, including the Washington Post and the New York Times.

Fernanda G. Nicola is Professor at the Washington College of Law, American University, where she directs the Program on International Organizations Law and Development. Her research and teaching interests are in comparative law, transnational legal theory and constitutional law. She received her PhD from Trento University and her SJD degree from Harvard Law School, where she was the recipient of the Mancini Prize in European Law. Professor Nicola has written on comparative family law, interspousal torts and gender in development policy in her forthcoming book Misuses of Comparative Law in International Development.

Stefano Osella is a Postdoctoral Research Fellow at Bocconi University, Department of Legal Studies, in Milan (Italy). He is also a Research Partner at the Max Planck Institute for Social Anthropology, Department of Law and Anthropology, in Halle (Saale), Germany. Previously, Stefano was Postdoctoral Global Fellow at the New York University School of Law. He obtained a doctorate in law with a specialization in public comparative law from the European University Institute, Florence. Stefano's research focuses on how constitutional and human rights represent and construct gender diversity, an area in which he has published several peer-reviewed articles. Methodologically, Stefano combines comparative law, queer theory and anthropology.

Kim Rubenstein is Professor in the Faculty of Business, Government and Law at the University of Canberra. A graduate of the University of Melbourne and Harvard University, she is Australia's leading expert on citizenship, and on law's intersection with broader normative notions of citizenship as membership and participation. This led to her scholarship around gender and public law, including legal work and oral history work around women lawyers' contributions in the public sphere. She was the Director of the Centre for International and Public law at the ANU from 2006 to 2015 and the Inaugural Convener of the ANU Gender Institute from 2011 to 2012. She is a Fellow of the Australian Academy of Law and the Australia Academy of Social Sciences.

Ruth Rubio-Marín is Professor at the School of Transnational Governance (STG), where she leads the work of gender governance. She is Professor of Constitutional Law at the University of Seville, as well as member of faculty of the Hauser Global Law School Program at New York University. Her research represents an attempt to understand how public law creates categories of inclusion and exclusion around different axes including gender, citizenship, nationality and ethnicity. Methodologically, she combines law and political theory.

Ann Shalleck is Professor of Law and Carrington Shields Scholar, American University, Washington College of Law, where she directs the Women and the Law Program. Her writing, research and teaching interests encompass family law, feminist theory, narrative theory, and clinical legal education. She coauthored Transforming the Education of Lawyers: The Theory and Practice of Clinical Pedagogy and Lawyers and Clients: Critical Issues in Interviewing and Counseling. The Women and the Law Program offers specialized courses on gender and the law, has a Gender Justice Clinic, integrates gender-related issues throughout the curriculum, organizes scholarly workshops, conducts projects on gender justice, and offers an LLM in Gender, International and Comparative Law.

Michael Thomson is Professor of Law at the University of Technology Sydney and the University of Leeds. His research interests span the fields of health law, children's rights, and legal and political theory. He has written on the legal regulation of reproduction, non-therapeutic interventions on children, and social and political theories that centre the body as a means of rearticulating the responsibilities of the state. His current work explores the role of law in addressing health inequalities. Recent publications include: 'A Capabilities Approach to Best Interests Assessments', Legal Studies (2021); 'Conscience, Abortion, and Jurisdiction', Oxford Journal of Legal Studies (2020) (with S. McGuinness); and A Jurisprudence of the Body (edited with C. Dietz and M. Travis, Palgrave, 2020).
