

GLOBAL POVERTY, INJUSTICE, AND RESISTANCE

Each year, millions of people die from poverty-related causes. In this groundbreaking and thought-provoking book, Gwilym David Blunt argues that the only people who will end this injustice are its victims, and that the global poor have the right to resist the causes of poverty. He explores how the right of resistance is used to reframe urgent political questions: is illegal immigration a form of resistance? Can transnational social movements, such as the indigenous rights movement, provide the foundations for civil resistance to global poverty? If peaceful resistance fails, is armed struggle justified? Do people living in affluent states have a responsibility to help, even if it requires them to break the law? Giving clear historical examples and engaging with fields including philosophy, international law, history, and international political studies, this volume addresses real-world issues from terrorism to activism. It will be important for anyone interested in applied philosophy and global injustice.

GWILYM DAVID BLUNT is Lecturer in International Politics at City, University of London. His work has been published in International Theory, Politics, and Human Rights Quarterly.

Acknowledgements

This book is the product of a Leverhulme Early Career Fellowship (ECF-2014-661) held at the University of Cambridge. I would like to convey my deepest thanks to the Leverhulme Trust for their generosity and trust, and to my colleagues in the Department of Politics and International Studies for their support. The Master, Fellows, and Students of Corpus Christi College must also be acknowledged for the many hours of conviviality and fellowship. I count my years living and working in Cambridge as some of the happiest in my life. Finally, my thanks to my colleagues at City, University of London for so warmly welcoming me into their community. Specifically, I would like to thank Duncan Bell, David Runciman, and Cécile Laborde for their advice over the years. Finally, I would like to thank Charles Jones, Richard Vernon, and Doug Long for introducing me to political philosophy as an undergraduate student at the University of Western Ontario many years ago.

Portions of the book have been presented at workshops and conferences over the past few years. I would like to thank the organisers and attendees of the Association of Political and Social Philosophy Conference, International Political Science Association Conference, Canadian Political Science Association Conference, British International Studies Conference, and the Global Policy Institute, Durham University.

This book returns to material published elsewhere: ‘Is Global Poverty a Crime against Humanity?’, International Theory 7, no. 3 (2015): 539–71; ‘Is There a Human Right to Resistance?’, Human Rights Quarterly 39, no. 4 (2017): 860–81; ‘Illegal Immigration as Resistance to Global Poverty’, Raisons Politiques 69, no. 1 (2018): 83–99. I am very grateful to Cambridge University Press, Johns Hopkins University Press, and Les Presses de Science Po for their permission to use elements of this work.

I am deeply grateful for the support of Hilary Gaskin, Lisa Carter, and Sophie Taylor at Cambridge University Press as well as the feedback from the two anonymous reviewers. They have made this book much stronger than it would have otherwise been.

My deepest gratitude goes to my wife, Anna, who has suffered through my moods and kept me grounded. This book would not have come to fruition without her. Equally, my parents, Allison and Laurence, have been pillars of love and support from the other side of the Atlantic. The same can be said of my sister Meredith, her husband Matt, and their children, Bronwyn and Elliott. Marc and Barbara Grunseit deserve my special thanks for keeping me supplied with coffee during the final dash to finish the book. I have incurred too many debts writing this book to thank all the people who have given me their support over the past few years.
