

MARKETING GLOBAL JUSTICE

Marketing Global Justice is a critical study of efforts to 'sell' global justice. The book offers a new reading of the rise of international criminal law as the dominant institutional expression of global justice, linking it to the rise of branding. The political economy analysis employed highlights that a global elite benefit from marketised global justice whilst those who tend to be the 'faces' of global injustice - particularly victims of conflict - are instrumentalised and ultimately commodified. The book is an invitation to critically consider the predominance of market values in global justice, suggesting an 'occupying' of global justice as an avenue for drawing out social values.

Christine Schwöbel-Patel is Associate Professor at Warwick Law School and Co-Director of the Centre for Critical Legal Studies. She is the author of Global Constitutionalism in International Legal Perspective (2011) and editor of Critical Approaches to International Criminal Law: An Introduction (2014).

CAMBRIDGE STUDIES IN INTERNATIONAL AND COMPARATIVE LAW: 152

Established in 1946, this series produces high quality, reflective and innovative scholarship in the field of public international law. It publishes works on international law that are of a theoretical, historical, cross-disciplinary or doctrinal nature. The series also welcomes books providing insights from private international law, comparative law and transnational studies which inform international legal thought and practice more generally.

The series seeks to publish views from diverse legal traditions and perspectives, and of any geographical origin. In this respect it invites studies offering regional perspectives on core problématiques of international law, and in the same vein, it appreciates contrasts and debates between diverging approaches. Accordingly, books offering new or less orthodox perspectives are very much welcome. Works of a generalist character are greatly valued and the series is also open to studies on specific areas, institutions or problems. Translations of the most outstanding works published in other languages are also considered.

After seventy years, Cambridge Studies in International and Comparative Law sets the standard for international legal scholarship and will continue to define the discipline as it evolves in the years to come.

Series Editors

Larissa van den Herik

Professor of Public International Law, Grotius Centre for International Legal Studies, Leiden University

Jean d'Aspremont

Professor of International Law, University of Manchester and Sciences Po Law School

A list of books in the series can be found at the end of this volume.

MARKETING GLOBAL JUSTICE

The Political Economy of International Criminal Law

CHRISTINE SCHWÖBEL-PATEL
University of Warwick

CAMBRIDGE
UNIVERSITY PRESS

Cambridge University Press & Assessment
 978-1-108-71090-9 — Marketing Global Justice
 Christine Schwöbel-Patel
 Frontmatter
More Information

CAMBRIDGE
 UNIVERSITY PRESS

Shaftesbury Road, Cambridge CB2 8EA, United Kingdom
 One Liberty Plaza, 20th Floor, New York, NY 10006, USA
 477 Williamstown Road, Port Melbourne, VIC 3207, Australia
 314–321, 3rd Floor, Plot 3, Splendor Forum, Jasola District Centre, New Delhi – 110025, India
 103 Penang Road, #05–06/07, Visioncrest Commercial, Singapore 238467

Cambridge University Press is part of Cambridge University Press & Assessment, a department of the University of Cambridge.

We share the University's mission to contribute to society through the pursuit of education, learning and research at the highest international levels of excellence.

www.cambridge.org
 Information on this title: www.cambridge.org/9781108710909

DOI: 10.1017/9781108697651

© Christine Schwöbel-Patel 2021

This publication is in copyright. Subject to statutory exception and to the provisions of relevant collective licensing agreements, no reproduction of any part may take place without the written permission of Cambridge University Press & Assessment.

First published 2021
 First paperback edition 2023

A catalogue record for this publication is available from the British Library

Library of Congress Cataloging-in-Publication data

Names: Schwöbel-Patel, Christine, author.

Title: Marketing global justice : the political economy of international criminal law /
 Christine Schwöbel-Patel.

Description: Cambridge, United Kingdom ; New York, NY : Cambridge University Press, 2021. |
 Series: Cambridge studies in international and comparative law | Includes bibliographical references and index.

Identifiers: LCCN 2021002441 (print) | LCCN 2021002442 (ebook) | ISBN 9781108482752
 (hardback) | ISBN 9781108710909 (paperback) | ISBN 9781108697651 (epub)

Subjects: LCSH: International criminal law—Public opinion. | International criminal law—Marketing. | Branding (Marketing) | Mass media and criminal justice.

Classification: LCC KZ7235 .S39 2021 (print) | LCC KZ7235 (ebook) | DDC 345—dc23
 LC record available at <https://lcn.loc.gov/2021002441>

LC ebook record available at <https://lcn.loc.gov/2021002442>

ISBN 978-1-108-48275-2 Hardback

ISBN 978-1-108-71090-9 Paperback

Cambridge University Press & Assessment has no responsibility for the persistence or accuracy of URLs for external or third-party internet websites referred to in this publication and does not guarantee that any content on such websites is, or will remain, accurate or appropriate.

CONTENTS

List of figures	ix
Acknowledgements	x

1 Introduction	1
1.1 Selling Global Justice	1
1.2 Global Justice in Competition	5
1.3 New Branding and New Tribunalism in the 1990s	10
1.4 Pro Logo or No Logo?	12
1.5 The Ideal and Material Worlds of Global Justice	14
1.6 The Aesthetics of Global Justice	16
1.7 The Erasure of the Political	18
1.8 ‘Occupying’ Global Justice	19
1.9 A Structure by Way of Key Points	20
1.10 Global Justice Discontents and Alternatives	21
2 Ad-Vocacy: What Is Marketing in Global Justice?	24
2.1 Introduction	24
2.2 What Is Marketing?	27
2.2.1 Branding	28
2.2.2 Advertising	34
2.2.3 Public Relations and Publicity	36
2.2.4 Public Diplomacy and Place Branding	37
2.2.5 Propaganda	39
2.3 Marketing Practices at the International Criminal Court	41
2.4 Global Justice in the Attention Economy	44
2.4.1 Spectacle	46
2.4.2 Stereotypes	50
2.5 Global Justice in a Globalised (and Neoliberal) World	52
2.6 Global Justice in a World of Legalised Morality	56
2.7 The Global Justice Sector	57
2.8 Conclusion	59

3	A Brand New Justice: How Global Justice Became Marketable in the 1990s	60
3.1	Introduction	60
3.2	History and the Questions Asked	63
3.3	Marketing in the 1990s	65
3.3.1	Branding Lifestyle	66
3.3.2	Commercialisation from Individualism to Socialism	67
3.3.3	Intellectual Property Protection and Value	69
3.3.4	Branding Beyond the Corporate Space	71
3.3.5	Contradictions and Backlashes	74
3.4	International Law in the 1990s	76
3.4.1	New Interventionism	78
3.4.2	An International Economic Order	83
3.4.3	The Rise of Individual Criminal Accountability	86
3.4.4	Contradictions and Backlashes	92
3.5	Conclusion	94
4	'A Picture Worth More Than a Thousand Words': The Value of Global Justice	96
4.1	Introduction	96
4.2	The Value of Global Justice	99
4.2.1	Use-Value and Exchange Value	102
4.2.2	Exchange Value and Visibility	103
4.3	A Global Justice Image	104
4.3.1	Images in the Courtroom	108
4.3.2	Publicity Outside of the Courtroom	110
4.3.3	Patronage Publicity	114
4.4	Marketised Global Justice As Mass Distraction	118
4.4.1	Narrowed Visibility As an Impact on Multiplicity	120
4.4.2	Narrowed Visibility As Rendering Structural Violence Invisible	123
4.5	Conclusion	125
5	'Working It': The Brand of the Ideal Victim	127
5.1	Introduction	127
5.2	The Victim: From Forgotten Subject to Brand	128
5.3	Constructing the 'Ideal Victim' of Global Injustice	132
5.3.1	The Victim As 'Weak and Vulnerable'	133
5.3.2	The Victim As 'Dependent'	137
5.3.3	The Victim As 'Grotesque'	139
5.4	Ideal Victim – Ideal Perpetrator – Ideal Representative Interrelationship	142
5.5	Commodification of Victimhood	143

CONTENTS

vii

5.6	Alienation from Suffering	146
5.7	Conclusion	149
6	Kony 2012: Making an Accused Famous	151
6.1	Introduction	151
6.2	Marketing Joseph Kony	154
6.2.1	Save Darfur As Precedent	156
6.2.2	Global Justice NGOs	158
6.2.3	The Dissemination Strategy and the Donor As Consumer	163
6.2.4	Backlashes Against Kony 2012	167
6.2.5	Resistance Against Kony 2012	174
6.3	Conclusion	178
7	Special Effects: The International Criminal Court in the Global Market	181
7.1	Introduction	181
7.2	Neoliberalism and the ICC	183
7.3	Enabling the Market	186
7.3.1	EU Interests in an Integrated Trade Law and Criminal Law Regime	189
7.3.2	ICC Interests in an Integrated Trade Law and Criminal Law Regime	191
7.4	Encasing the Market	193
7.5	Crisis at the ICC	196
7.5.1	Backlash Against the ICC	198
7.5.2	Resistance to the ICC	201
7.6	Responses to Resistance	203
7.7	Re-branding the ICC	206
7.8	Conclusion	208
8	Branding the Global (In)Justice Place	213
8.1	Introduction	213
8.2	Place Branding As a Practice and a Field	216
8.3	Nation Branding and International Law	220
8.4	Place Branding and Global (In)Justice	223
8.5	Justice Investment: The Hague and The Netherlands	225
8.6	Transition Tourism and Investment: South Africa	230
8.7	Dark Tourism and the Patron–Client Relationship of Global Justice: Cambodia	233
8.8	Backlashes and Resistance	239
8.9	Conclusion	240

9	'Occupying' Global Justice	242
9.1	Introduction	242
9.2	Reform or Revolution?	244
9.2.1	Strategy and Tactics	246
9.2.2	Decoloniality	247
9.3	Tactics	249
9.3.1	Unplugged Global Justice	250
9.3.2	De-spectacularised Global Justice	254
9.3.3	Unmasked Global Justice	258
9.3.4	Resistance Global Justice	262
9.4	Conclusion	268
10	Conclusion	269
10.1	Postscript	272
	Select Bibliography	274
	Index	303

FIGURES

- Figure 1.1 The Court, movie poster 2
Figure 2.1 Obama campaign poster 31
Figure 5.1 ICC Visitor Centre 147
Figure 6.1 Kony 2012 campaign poster 164
Figure 9.1 Radi-Aid 259
Figure 9.2 ‘Day of Solidarity’ by Berta Abeléndá 264

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

Many people had a hand in helping this book ripen from idea to manuscript and I am deeply indebted to them. I am particularly indebted to the immense intellectual labour from which I draw in my quotations and references. I have tried, where possible, to rely on female thinkers in this book – an amazing array of wonderful spirit, defiance, and brain power.

I am thankful to the people who have given me the space to write. And – while acknowledging the privilege of being able to write in a warm room, on a nice computer and with a fully belly, a supportive husband and family – in a genre-breaking move, I also want to acknowledge the pressures and struggles. When reading the acknowledgements of other authors, I am struck with a deep envy of extended peaceful research periods, generous grants, exceptional editors, formidable colleagues, friends, and families. Oh, I am lucky to have formidable colleagues, friends, and family, and an exceptional editor, and had two periods of research leave, but much of my working time remains hard-fought, compromised, and negotiated. This book was written between school runs and meetings, during long and bank-balance-busting commutes, between bedtime battles and sleep-deprived nights, between travels to conferences after arranging a military-style operation of childcare, between rudimentary house cleans and cooking basic dinners, in snatched moments of having hooked the kids onto the television. It was written between teaching preparations, lectures and seminars, and meeting student demands; it was written between writing reviews and responding to emails. And then there is the restlessness that comes with a keen sense that the wonderful work which is in progress at the same time must also be ‘The Competition’. Despite the admiration, there is a worrying sense that this competition never sleeps, is always one step ahead, doing a project more valuable, more captivating. Thousands of women and their families, of course, do the same. We muddle through: Never quite achieving everything on the to-do list; never getting to that illusory place promised as ‘things will get better when . . .’; never seeing the bottom of that insatiable washing basket. So, it is heartening to know that the academic nirvana exists in some people’s acknowledgements, but it does not exist in mine. This book, then, is a product of the neoliberal order in which we live. Ironically, I realise that a book engaging with neoliberalism has perhaps come about because of this and not despite of it. But, neoliberalism is not the hero in this story. Rather, the heroes are those who fight it with their politics, their solidarity, their activism, and their kindness.

So I soften when I think of the amazing network of solidarity without which this book would not have come about. Intellectual co-travellers, who generously gave up some of their precious time to read draft chapters include Kate Grady, who found the time to comment on a draft just as her own book was coming close to completion; Jessie Hohmann, a co-traveller not only in common research questions but also in the exhausting course of being a working academic mum of young children; Robert Knox, who is wise and witty, and whose feedback is so on-point that it generates the greatest admiration and envy; Mavluda Sattorova, my brilliant friend who is my gracious SOS contact for many international law questions; Ntina Tzouvala, whose unfathomably extensive knowledge of international law and political economy helped bring loose ends of the argument together; Latha Varadarajan, who reminds me not to get distracted from the most important questions; Illan Wall, whose energy can move the most obstinate of obstacles, from conceptual doubt to departmental policies; and my dad, Christoph Schwöbel, whose ability to immediately pick up the core of an argument has been a lifelong object of my admiration. I am lucky to have friends who are marketing professionals, who sent me literature recommendations and read drafts. Sarah and James O’Connor remind me that marketing is often driven by smart, generous, and kind people (too). The exchange with my mum, Marlene Schwöbel-Hug, was one of the most valuable aspects of the writing process. I sent her each chapter via email, which she then printed out at her home in Germany, read and marked up, and sent in the post back to the UK. She became more and more outraged by the injustice of marketised global justice, which spurred me on. My husband and partner, Axit, grudgingly read drafts and listened to my monologues on the other side of the childcare, house-care, career-care squeeze (which he begrudges far less than the reading of drafts) and despite believing that he would not be able to give me any useful feedback, gave me the best. After a perhaps unforgiveable reduction of these wonderful people to a few adjectives, there are others who also helped this project along, through commenting on drafts, discussions of ideas, creating opportunities to present work in progress, or through their own research. Many thanks to Marina Aksenova, Kelly-Jo Bluen, Lianne Boer, Adam Branch, Ruth Buchanan, Michelle Burgis-Kasthala, Kirsten Campbell, Richard Clements, Randle DeFalco, Mark Drumbl, Maria Elander, Michelle Farrell, Matt Fisher, Jo Frank, Geoff Gordon, Alexandre Haines, John Haskell, Daniel Joyce, David Kennedy, Emily Kidd-White, Tor Krever, Dino Kritsiotis, Heidi Matthews, Pdraig McAuliffe, Frédéric Mégret, Liz Moor, Gabe Mythen, Kate Nash, Vasuki Nesiah, Anne Neylon, Alan Norrie, Sarah Nouwen, Deger Ozkaramanli, Charlie Peevers, Sophie Rigney, Gerry Simpson, Maja Spanu, Sofia Stolk, Victor Tadros, Immi Tallgren, and Wouter Werner. Despite this great collaborative effort, I, of course, take sole responsibility for any errors.

I had the opportunity to present work in progress at many conferences and workshops over the years. I am grateful for those who organised, attended, and commented at these events. They include Warwick Law School's Centre for Critical Legal Studies reading group; the Narration and Aesthetics in Transnational Law and Politics Workshop, Centre for Global Cooperation, University of Duisburg-Essen; Law, Arts, Culture Seminar, Osgoode Hall Law School, York University; ReVisions Seminar Series, University of Glasgow; Art and International Courts Workshop, iCourts, University of Copenhagen; International Humanitarian Law Unit, University of Nottingham; Unit for Global Justice, Goldsmiths, University of London; International Law and the Media Workshop, Queen Mary University of London; Third World Approaches to International Law: On Praxis and the Intellectual Conference, The American University Cairo; Seminar Series, Warwick Law School; Institute for Global Law and Policy, June events, Harvard Law School; Visiting Fellows' Seminar, Lauterpacht Centre for International Law, University of Cambridge; and the Law and Boundaries Conference, Sciences Po. I also owe thanks to the series editors Jean d'Aspremont and Larissa van den Herik for their enthusiasm for this rather unusual international law book. Tom Randall has been an exceptionally engaged, patient, and reassuring editor.

Earlier conceptualisations of the themes in this book appeared in 'The Rule of Law as a Marketing Tool: The International Criminal Court and the Brand of Global Justice', in Christopher May and Adam Winchester (eds.), Research Handbook on the Rule of Law (Edward Elgar 2018) 434–452 and 'The Market and Marketing Culture of International

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

xiii

Criminal Law’, in Christine Schwöbel (ed.), Critical Approaches to International Criminal Law – An Introduction (Routledge 2014) 264–280. An earlier version of Chapter 5 ‘Working It: The Brand of the Ideal Victim’ appeared as ‘The Ideal Victim of International Criminal Law’ (2018) 29(3) European Journal of International Law 703–724. I am grateful for permission to reproduce this material here.

This book, whose beginnings predate them both, is for Nilu and Ayla, with gratitude that they always make me laugh, and in the hope that they might be less enthralled by marketised global justice than my generation.