A Renaissance of Violence

Based on a close examination of more than 700 homicide trials, A Renaissance of Violence exposes the deep social instability at the core of the early modern states of North Italy. Following a series of crises in the early seventeenth century, interpersonal violence in the region grew to frightening levels, despite the efforts of courts and governments to reduce social conflict. In this detailed study of violence in early modern Europe, Colin Rose shows how major crises, such as the plague of 1630, reduced the strength of social bonds among both elite and ordinary Italians. As a result, incidents of homicidal violence exploded – in small rural communities, in the crowded urban center and within tightly knit families. Combining statistical analysis and close reading of homicide patterns, Rose demonstrates how the social contexts of violence, as much as the growth of state power, can contribute to explaining how and why interpersonal violence grew so rapidly in North Italy in the seventeenth century.

Colin Rose is Assistant Professor of European and Digital History at Brock University, St. Catharines, Canada. He has held fellowships with the Harry Frank Guggenheim Foundation, the Centre for Criminology and Criminological Studies at the University of Toronto and the Academy for the Advanced Study of the Renaissance. He is co-editor of Mapping Space, Sense and Movement in Florence: Historical GIS and the Early Modern City (2016) with Nicholas Terpstra, and co-director of the innovative DECIMA web-GIS of Renaissance Florence (www.decima-map.net).
A Renaissance of Violence

_Homicide in Early Modern Italy_

Colin Rose
Brock University
To Sarah Blanshei, Maestra in Archivio

Pieter Spierenburg, whose influence on my work is deep and abiding, unfortunately passed away during the production of this work. Though I met him only once, I will remember his kindness to me as a graduate student challenging his research. I regret that he will not be able to review this book. I hope it can stand as a testament to his foundational research into the problems of early modern violence, upon which a large community of scholars has depended for many years.
Contents

List of Illustrations page ix
Acknowledgments xi

1 Introduction 1
The Scene of the Crime: Seventeenth-Century Bologna 7
Interpreting Early Modern Violence 13
Defining and Prosecuting Homicide 31
The Shape of Homicide in Early Modern Bologna 39

2 The Tower of Justice 42
Introduction 42
Procedure 46
The Public Trust: Reforming the Torrone 56
State Homicide: Executions, 1600–1700 68
Conclusion 77

3 Homicide in Bologna, 1600–1700 79
Introduction 79
Characteristics of Homicide in 1600 82
1610 and 1620: A Peaceful City, a Blood-Soaked Plain 92
General Characteristics of Homicide in 1632 104
Homicides in 1640, 1652 and 1660: Civil War Brewing 107
1670, 1680 and 1690: A Sharp Decline 116
1700: At Century’s End 127
A Century Retrospective: The Parabola of Violence 130

4 Gender and Homicide in Early Modern Bologna 141
Introduction 141
Gender, Honour and Violence 142
Homicides of Women 145
Homicides by Women 147
Infanticide 151
Conclusion 154
viii Contents

5 The Days after No Future: Post-Plague Homicides in Rural Bologna 156
   Introduction 156
   The World Turned Upside-Down: Bernardino Spada’s Failed Efforts to Combat the Plague, and the Expansion of the Torrone’s Authority 158
   Post-plague Homicides in the Bolognese contado: Poverty, Disillusion and Revenge 165
   Conclusion 178

6 It’s Good to Have Land: The Defence of Noble Privilege through Violence 181
   Introduction: The Death of a Judge 181
   Nobility, Redefined: Torrone Legislation on Factionalism and Weapons 185
   Urban Homicides in the Wake of the Plague: The Nobility React 193
   Elite Feuding and Common Struggles: Case Studies from the War 210
   Conclusion 220

7 Conclusion 223

Bibliography 229
Index 242
Illustrations

FIGURES

2.1 Executions in Bologna, 1600–1700
3.1 Homicides per month, 1600
3.2 Homicides by weapon used, 1600
3.3 Homicides by relationship, 1600
3.4 Homicides by month, 1610
3.5 Homicides per month, 1620
3.6 Weapons used in homicides, 1610
3.7 Weapons used in homicides, 1620
3.8 Homicidal relationships, 1610
3.9 Homicidal relationships, 1620
3.10 Homicides per month, 1632
3.11 Weapons used in homicides, 1632
3.12 Relationships between killers and victims, 1632
3.13 Homicides by month, 1640
3.14 Weapons used in homicides, 1640
3.15 Relationships between killers and victims, 1640
3.16 Homicides by month, 1652
3.17 Weapons used in homicides, 1652
3.18 Homicidal relationships, 1652
3.19 Homicides by month, 1660
3.20 Weapons used in homicides, 1660
3.21 Homicidal relationships, 1660
3.22 Homicides by month, 1670
3.23 Weapons used in homicides, 1670
3.24 Homicidal relationships, 1670
3.25 Homicides by month, 1680
3.26 Weapons used in homicides, 1680
3.27 Homicidal relationships, 1680
3.28 Homicides by month, 1690
3.29 Homicidal relationships, 1690
List of Illustrations

3.30 Weapons used in homicides, 1690 126
3.31 Homicides by month, 1700 128
3.32 Weapons used in homicides, 1700 129
3.33 Homicidal relationships, 1700 130
3.34 Number of homicides per month, 1600–1700 131
3.35 Average monthly homicides, 1600–1700 132
3.36 Weapons used in homicides, 1600–1700 133
3.37 Homicide rates in the legato of Bologna, 1600–1700 137

MAPS

1.1 The major cities of North Italy, showing the borders of the papal state north of Tuscany 8
3.1 Homicides by proportional dot in the legato of Bologna and surroundings, 1600–1700 138
Acknowledgments

I would like to thank the many people who aided and abetted the writing of this book, from its beginnings as my PhD dissertation at the University of Toronto through to its present form.

The research for this project was funded by the Social Sciences and Humanities Research Council of Canada, the Harry Frank Guggenheim Foundation and the Andrew W. Mellon Foundation via a Distinguished Achievement Award to Edward Muir in 2010. Both the University of Toronto and Brock University contributed money for trips to the archives. I am grateful for the support of these organizations.

While working in the very pleasant archives in Bologna, I was privileged to work with the archivists and staff of the Archivio di Stato di Bologna and the Biblioteca dell’Archiginnasio. Many thanks in particular to Giancarlo and Laborio at the ASBo. Long may North Americans receive such kind welcomes in your care. Grazie anche a Prof. Giancarlo Angelozzi.

Thanks indeed to my colleagues at Brock University for welcoming me to faculty life and providing mentorship and advice as I have begun my teaching career.

Thanks to the community of bolognisti whom I have encountered along the way, and who have always been generous with ideas and friendship.

Many, many thanks to Dr. Edward Muir and Dr. Regina Schwartz, along with the entire membership of the Academy for the Advanced Study of the Renaissance, 2014 edition, for their friendship, generosity and critical readings of various stages of this work.

To many colleagues and friends at the University of Toronto, especially fellow Italianists Vanessa McCarthy and John Christopoulos, and dissertation committee members Paul Cohen and Mark Meyerson, and my “Internal External” examiner Ken Bartlett: thank you all for supporting this project at an early phase.

Thanks to the scholars at the Centre for Reformation and Renaissance Studies in Toronto, especially Amyrose McCue-Gill and Natalie Oeltjen, for providing a welcome home away from home to this day.
Thanks to all of the historians of violence who have contributed ideas and explanations over the years, in particular my External dissertation examiner Stuart Carroll for his insightful comments on early stages of the manuscript.

To the two anonymous reviewers of Cambridge University Press, especially Reader #2, without whose trenchant comments you would all be subject to thirty-five pages of historiography in Chapter 1. The work is stronger for their helpful suggestions, though of course, any and all errors or sloppy prose remain mine and mine alone.

Thanks to Jovi the Shar-Pei, who supervised the writing of the first draft but who is no longer with us to see the final product.

Thanks to Dr. Gregory Hanlon, who deserves much credit for pushing me toward this project in the first place, and for first teaching me the skills and habits of an effective archival historian.

Thanks to Dr. Nicholas Terpstra, who has been a mentor for fourteen years and a friend for many of those, and a collaborator for many more to come. I have benefitted immensely from his patience and wisdom, and his academic and professional advice.

Thanks to Dr. Sarah Blanshei, to whom I dedicate this work. Sarah has been a mentor and a friend and she deserves more gratitude than can be offered here. I am utterly in her debt for the kindness she has shown me since we first met in 2011.

Thanks to my partner Madison, whose suggestions I have learned to take the first time offered.

Thanks to Arthur and Henry, my little guys. Maybe you can read the next one, not about murder … love, Daddy.