

Violence and the Caste War of Yucatán

Violence and the Caste War of Yucatán analyzes the extent and forms of violence employed during one of the most significant indigenous rural revolts in nineteenth-century Latin America: the Caste War of Yucatán in the tropical southeast of Mexico. Combining the results of historical, anthropological and sociological research with the thorough investigation of primary sources from numerous archives, the book ascertains that violence was neither random nor the result of individual bloodthirstiness but in many cases followed specific patterns related to demographic, economic, political and military factors. In addition to its use against the enemy, violence also played a role in the establishment and maintenance of order and leadership within the ranks of the contending parties. While the Caste War has been widely considered a conflict between the whites and the Maya, this book shows that Indians and non-Indians fought and died on both sides.

Wolfgang Gabbert is Professor of Development Sociology and Cultural Anthropology at the Leibniz University Hannover in Germany. He is the author of Becoming Maya: Ethnicity and Social Inequality in Yucatán since 1500 (2004) and Creoles: Afroamerikaner im karibischen Tiefland von Nicaragua (1992).

Acknowledgments

The drama of the Caste War in Yucatán attracted my attention many years ago when I read Nelson Reed's pioneering study on the topic. From the very beginning, I was puzzled by what moved people to commit gross acts of violence. Tackling this riddle and completing this book has taken quite some time, however, as research and writing were frequently interrupted by other academic commitments. Over the years, the support and encouragement of many people made this project viable. Although I mention but a few, my thanks go to all of them. I am particularly grateful to Paul Sullivan, who shared his encyclopedic knowledge of the Caste War and generously provided me with copies of some rare documents. His painstaking reading of a manuscript version of this book helped to sharpen my arguments and avoid a number of factual errors. Beyond this, his own work on the Caste War has been an inspiration. John Chuchiak made transcripts of several letters from Caste War rebels available to me unstintingly. Nelson Reed, Matthew Restall, Terry Rugeley, Rajeshwari Dutt, Romana Falcón and Raymund Buve provided me with helpful comments on papers and manuscripts that have become part of this book. The work of Georg Elwert had a lasting impact on my understanding of conflict and violence. Any remaining errors of fact and interpretation are, of course, mine. Michel Antochiw, Othón Baños Ramírez, Ramón Berzunza Pinto, Bernd Hausberger, Ueli Hostettler, Esteban Krotz, Laura Machuca, Barbara Pfeiler, Ella Fanny Quintal Avilés, Teresa Ramayo Lanz, Vera Tiesler and Lorraine Williams Beck provided intellectual and practical support in Mérida, Campeche and Mexico City. Grateful thanks also go to the directors and archivists at the Archivo General de la Nación and the Archivo Histórico Militar of the Secretaría de la Defensa Nacional in Mexico City, the Archivo General del Estado de Yucatán and the Centro de Apoyo a la Investigación Histórica de Yucatán (now Biblioteca Yucatanense) in Mérida, the Archivo Histórico del Arzobispado de Yucatán in Conkal and the Archivo General del Estado de Campeche in Campeche. As on other occasions, it was a real pleasure to work with Sunniva Greve on the polishing of my prose.

My greatest debt is to Ute Schüren who, following her own inquiry on Yucatán's past, shared most research stays in Mexico and beyond, critically commented on earlier versions of my manuscript and helped me to express my thoughts more clearly and in a more ordered fashion.

Financial support for some of the archival research this book is based on was provided by the Deutsche Forschungsgemeinschaft.
