Constitution making is a major event in the life of a country, with constitutions often acting as a catalyst for social and political transformation. But what determines the visions, aspirations and compromises that go into a written constitution? In this unique volume, constitution makers from countries around the world come together to offer their insights. Using a collection of case studies from countries with recently written constitutions, Constitution Makers on Constitution Making provides a common framework to explain how constitutions are created. Scholars and practitioners very close to the process illuminate critical insights into how participants see constitutional options, how deadlocks are broken and how changes are achieved. This vital volume also draws lessons concerning the role of courts in policing the process, the involvement of international actors and the participation of the public.

Tom Ginsburg is the Leo Spitz Professor of International Law at the University of Chicago, where he also holds an appointment in the Political Science Department. His books include Democracies and International Law (2021); How to Save a Constitutional Democracy (2018, with Aziz Z. Huq); Judicial Reputation (2015, with Nuno Garoupa); The Endurance of National Constitutions (2009, with Zachary Elkins and James Melton); Judicial Review in New Democracies (2003), and over 20 edited volumes.

Sumit Bisarya is Head of the Constitution Building Process Programme at the International Institute for Democracy and Electoral Assistance (IDEA). Previously he was the Senior Constitutions Advisor with the United Nations Department for Political and Peacebuilding Affairs. He has over a decade of experience in providing constitutional assistance in over fifteen countries around the world.
COMPARATIVE CONSTITUTIONAL LAW AND POLICY

Series Editors

Comparative constitutional law is an intellectually vibrant field that encompasses an increasingly broad array of approaches and methodologies. This series collects analytically innovative and empirically grounded work from scholars of comparative constitutionalism across academic disciplines. Books in the series include theoretically informed studies of single constitutional jurisdictions, comparative studies of constitutional law and institutions, and edited collections of original essays that respond to challenging theoretical and empirical questions in the field.

This volume uses Annotation for Transparent Inquiry (ATI), an initiative of the Qualitative Data Repository at the Maxwell School at Syracuse University and Hypothesis (a software nonprofit), which Cambridge University Press has integrated into Cambridge Core. ATI is a new approach to achieving transparency in qualitative and multi-method research that employs “open annotation,” allowing for the generation, sharing and discovery of digital annotations across the web. Scholars who use ATI annotate specific passages in a digitally published work, amplifying the text, facilitating transparency, comprehension and evaluation. Annotations include “analytic notes” that add detail about the work’s evidentiary basis or analytic strategy, excerpts from data sources that underlie claims and potentially links to the data sources themselves. Here, we used ATI to reference and link to numerous legal documents, including peace agreements, draft constitutional proposals, constituent assembly rules and court cases.
