

Contents

Acknowledgments	page ix
List of Abbreviations	xii
Current Place Names	xiv
 Introduction	 1
The Problem	1
The Literature	6
The Prison Camp Paradigm and Alternative Reality	17
The Sources	21
 1 The Prisoners of War and the German Women	 27
The French	27
The Belgians	33
The British	37
Other Prisoners	40
The German Women	46
 2 The Legal Framework	 53
Why the Prohibition?	53
The Order for the Prisoners of War	58
The Legislation for German Women	80
Trials Involving Prisoners of War and Other Men	86
Assessment	89
 3 The Relations	 93
Meeting Each Other	93
Communication between Foreigners	96
Erotic Encounters	98
Longing for Comfort and Emotional Warmth	112
Sincere Love	118
Gender Dynamics	131
 4 Discovery	 140
The Process of Discovery	140
The Guards	141
Random Denunciations	150
Neighbors As Denouncers	160
Discovery through the Employer or Fellow Workers	164
	vii

viii	Contents
	Family Members As Denouncers	176
	Denunciation through the Prisoner or the Woman and Discovery Chains	184
	Discovery Not Leading to Immediate Denunciation	190
	Other Discoveries	196
	Assessment	203
5	The Trials	206
	Two Legal Systems	206
	The Trials of the Women	209
	The Courts Martial	224
	Justifications	237
	Assessment	246
6	Behind Bars	249
	The Path of the Convicted Women	249
	Clemency Pleas for Incarcerated Women	251
	The Reaction of the Husbands	262
	Women as Essential Workers	276
	The End of Incarceration for the Women	278
	A Soldier's Concentration Camp? The Specter of Graudenz	282
	The Fallout for the Prisoner of War Families	300
7	Case Studies	302
	The Wife of a Jew	302
	The Mother of a Prisoner of War	306
	A Frenchman for Everybody?	313
	A Failed Group Escape	322
	Two Wehrmacht Auxiliaries	328
	British Jew and Polish German	330
8	Memory	339
	Conclusion: Resistance, Dissent, Opposition?	354
	Bibliography	361
	Index	378