

SHAKESPEARE AND BRITISH WORLD WAR TWO FILM

During World War Two, many British writers and thinkers turned to Shakespeare to articulate the values for which their nation was fighting. Yet the cinema presented moviegoers with a more multifaceted Shakespeare, one who signaled division as well as unity. Shakespeare and British World War Two Film models a synchronic approach to adaptation that, by situating the Shakespeare movie within histories of film and society, avoids the familiar impasse in which the playwright's works are the beginning, middle and end of critical study. Through close analysis of works by Laurence Olivier, Leslie Howard, Humphrey Jennings, and the partners Michael Powell and Emeric Pressburger, among others, this study demonstrates how Shakespeare served as a powerful imaginative resource for filmmakers seeking to think through some of the most pressing issues and problems that beset wartime British society.

GARRETT A. SULLIVAN, JR., Liberal Arts Professor of English, teaches at Pennsylvania State University. He is author of The Drama of Landscape: Land, Property and Social Relations on the Early Modern Stage (1998), Memory and Forgetting in English Renaissance Drama: Shakespeare, Marlowe, Webster (Cambridge University Press, 2005), and Sleep, Romance and Human Embodiment: Vitality from Spenser to Milton (Cambridge University Press, 2012). With Mary Floyd-Wilson, he coedited Environment and Embodiment in Early Modern England (2020). He coedits, with Julie Sanders, the book series Early Modern Literary Geographies. He is a past trustee of the Shakespeare Association of America.

This book has benefited from the sage advice, material support and/or ready enthusiasm of many people. It is also the product of a long-running conversation about film (and Shakespeare, and beer) with Greg Semenza, my sometime collaborator and all-the-time friend. Whenever I've had my doubts about this project, Greg has both insisted upon its merits and shown me how to make it better by way of his feedback and his critical example. The book is also much stronger for Courtney Lehmann's astute comments on early versions of Chapters 2 and 3, not to mention her interest in the project as a whole. Greg and Courtney each directed a superb SAA seminar - "Shakespeare and Film History," 2019, and "Shakespeare and Film Form," 2017 – from which this book has benefited enormously. I would like to thank the participants in those seminars for the generative conversation. I delivered papers from this project at Ohio University, Manhattan College, the University of Connecticut and Penn State, and I am grateful for the feedback I received at those venues. I am grateful to Johns Hopkins University Press for granting me permission to publish as Chapter 4 a significantly revised version of "More Than Cool Reason Ever Comprehends': Shakespeare, Imagination and Distributed Auteurism in A Matter of Life and Death," Shakespeare Bulletin 34.3 (Fall 2016): 373-389.

In the near-certainty that I will inadvertently leave someone out (sorry about that!), I would like to express my gratitude to the following colleagues and former students for fruitful conversation, inspiration and/or advice: Dan Beaver, Kevin Bell, Claire Bourne, Martin Butler, Brian Chalk, Patrick Cheney, Ashley Cross, Melissa Croteau, Sam Crowl, Kevin Curran, Tim Donovan, Bob Edwards, Jim Egan, Mary Floyd-Wilson, Loreen Giese, Mike Hart, Bob Hasenfratz, Peter Hegarty, Heather Hirschfeld, Coppélia Kahn, Brendan Kane, Doug Lanier, David Loewenstein, Janet Lyon, David McInnis, Aileen McKinstry, Rivky Mondal, Vin Nardizzi, Marcy North, Andrew Penman, Beth Quitslund,

Julie Sanders, Jim Schultz, Karen Schultz, Stuart Selber, Alan Stewart, Paul Stevens, Kate Sweeney, Matt Tierney and Marica Tacconi. My department head, Mark Morrisson, has consistently offered support for this and other projects, for which I am very thankful.

The British Film Institute's Reuben Library was invaluable to this project. I'd particularly like to thank the Special Collections staff, who so graciously enabled me to dig around in the BFI's rich archives: Jonny Davies (2017), Victoria Bennett (2018) and Storm Patterson (2019). Thanks also to the estate of Michael Powell for granting permission to examine his papers.

At Cambridge, Emily Hockley has not only supported this project from early on; she shepherded it through the review process ably and expeditiously, and it has been a true pleasure to work with her. I'm also indebted to Cambridge's anonymous readers for their validation of this project and their excellent suggestions for improving it. Thanks also to Natasha Burton and George Laver and everyone else at CUP.

Last but far from least, I would like to thank my family, starting with my partner, Marie (once again, CSSOHTP!), my father, Garry, and my stepmother, Lorry. This book is dedicated to my wonderful siblings, Tracy, Amy, Sheila and Peirce.
