

TRANSNATIONAL LAWMAKING COALITIONS FOR HUMAN RIGHTS

Transnational Lawmaking Coalitions is the first comprehensive analysis of the role and impact of informal collaborations in the UN human rights treaty bodies. Issues as central to international human rights as the right to water, abortion, torture, and hate speech are often only clarified through the instrument of treaty interpretations. This book dives beneath the surface of the formal access, procedures, and actors of the UN treaty body system to reveal how the experts and external collaborators play a key role in the development of human rights. Nina Reiners introduces the concept of “Transnational Lawmaking Coalitions” within a novel theoretical framework and draws on a number of detailed case studies and original data. This study makes a significant contribution to the scholarship on human rights, transnational actors, and international organizations, and contributes to broader debates in international relations and international law.

Nina Reiners is a postdoctoral researcher in International Relations at the University of Potsdam. She is associated with the Berlin-Potsdam research group “International Rule of Law,” and the Global Governance Centre at the Graduate Institute, Geneva.

Acknowledgments

This book started as a PhD dissertation, developed into a two-year postdoctoral project, and was rigorously discussed and reflected upon in a variety of settings before it finally became this book. Despite all the changes made, new cases included, and theory expanded, and although multiple alternatives were pitched, the title of this book now brings this project back full circle, back to where it started – to the dissertation. “Transnational Lawmaking Coalitions for Human Rights” received support from many people and institutions. Some were crucial at an early stage, some provided decisive input without probably being aware of it, and others were a constant flow of support. I follow here with an essential, but by no means exhaustive, list of people and institutions I wish to recognize for their support.

Andrea Liese is my expert authority on international institutions and has been encouraging ever since I walked into her office in Potsdam. I will never take her truly exceptional mentorship for granted. I benefited immensely from the patience and advice of Harald Fuhr. My PhD time in Potsdam’s Karl-Marx-Strasse and on Campus Griebnitzsee was truly a team experience which I was lucky to share with other curious minds at the Faculty of Social Sciences and Economics. Rather than name all fellow PhD students, postdocs, students and research assistants, professors and colleagues in the university, and faculty administration who made this time so special for me, I would like to single out Per-Olof Busch, Marion Dräger, and Thomas Hickmann for their support.

Particularly formative for this book’s journey was my time at the University of San Diego in 2016. Hans Peter Schmitz, who generously shared his knowledge about international human rights and advocacy, asked the right questions and became an exceptional advisor and mentor. The research group (KFG) “International Rule of Law” proved to be an excellent environment in which I could sharpen my arguments and understand international law – and lawyers – much better. Heike Krieger, in giving particularly discerning attention to my project, added valuable contributions to my thinking about human rights law. The Graduate Institute in Geneva became my second academic home during the book's journey. I thank Nico Krisch for his enduring support and for the decisive time as a visiting scholar with his "PATHS of International Law" team. Stephanie Hofmann gave me a forum to discuss a first proposal of this book, and I thank her dearly for her encouragement. I also thank everyone who participated for their input.

I further extend my gratitude to the following people who read proposals and chapters of this book at various draft stages and provided helpful comments at conferences, workshops, or during the final writing stages: Hannah Birkenkötter, Thomas Dörfler, Benjamin Faude, Sassan Gholiagha, Heidi Haddad, Tine Hanrieder, Jana Herold, Anna Holzscheiter, Andrew Hurrell, Anja Jetschke, Max Lesch, Lydia Malmédie, Anthea Roberts, Andrea Schapper, Andreas von Staden, Jonas Tallberg, Ezgi Yildiz, and Fuad Zarbiyev. I also thank the organizers and participants in colloquia and research seminars at the University of Stirling, the Graduate Institute Geneva, the ECPR Standing Group on Law and Courts, and the University of Stockholm for inviting me to discuss this book project. I hope you can see many of our discussions reflected in the final manuscript.

The following institutions were crucial for the success of this book project: I thank the Fritz Thyssen Foundation for the generous funding of a two-year postdoctoral grant and the opportunity to participate in the intellectually stimulating environment of their "Human Rights in the 20th Century" study group. I thank the Academic Council on the United Nations System (ACUNS) and the United Nations Association of Germany (DGVN) for providing opportunities to interact with UN scholars and practitioners. Furthermore, I thank the Potsdam Graduate School, the German Academic Exchange Service (DAAD), and the Office for Equal Opportunities in Potsdam for financial support that made many conferences and research stays possible.

Without the individuals in and around the UN in Geneva who gave me their time, provided access to their networks, sat down with me for a coffee or lunch, and helped me better understand their work, this book would indeed not have been possible. I particularly thank the staff of Office of the High Commissioner for Human Rights and in the UN archives in Geneva, who reacted to all my requests despite their workload and would even notify me two years later about potentially relevant documents discovered. Claire Mahon and Ana Maria Suárez Franco deserve special recognition for helping me to navigate the Geneva human rights world.

At every stage of this project, Cambridge University Press has been supportive and encouraging. I am truly grateful for making my first book-publishing experience one I could get used to. Three reviewers generously provided helpful comments on my manuscript. I thank Alex M. Smith for his magical edits and for staying so excited about my not-too-exciting academic writing. I also thank Christina Schneider for thoroughly checking references and improving figures and tables.

Thanks to family, friends, and colleagues in Fischeln, Berlin, Frankfurt, Geneva, Madrid, London, Rome, Stockholm, Gothenburg, San Diego, Jakarta, and beyond and between, who allowed me to stay focused and distracted me when needed.
