FLODOARD OF RHEIMS AND THE WRITING OF HISTORY IN THE TENTH CENTURY

Flodoard of Rheims (893/4–966) is one of the tenth century’s most intriguing but neglected historians. His works are essential sources for the emergence of the West Frankish and Ottonian kingdoms in the tumultuous decades following the collapse of the Carolingian empire in 888. Yet although Flodoard is a crucial narrative voice from this period, his works have seldom been considered in the context of the evolving circumstances of his turbulent career or his literary aims. This important new study is the first to analyse and synthesise Flodoard’s entire output, suggesting that his writings about Rheims, contemporary politics and the Christian past have until now been taken at face value without regard for his own intentions or priorities, and therefore have been misunderstood. Edward Roberts’ re-evaluation of the relationship between political participation, historical understanding and authorial individuality casts important new light on the political and cultural history of tenth-century Europe.

Edward Roberts is Lecturer in Early Medieval History at the University of Kent, where his research focuses on the political and cultural history of the Carolingian empire and its successor states. He has previously held positions as a postdoctoral researcher at King’s College London and the Universidad del País Vasco, and as a Leverhulme Trust Early Career Fellow at the University of Liverpool. He is the author of articles in Early Medieval Europe, Journal of Medieval History, Cahiers de Civilisation Médiévale and Historical Research. His first article was awarded the Early Medieval Europe Essay Prize in 2015.

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

This book has been a long time in the making, and it is a privilege finally to be able to thank those whose inspiration made it possible and whose advice and correction made it better. A debt of immense gratitude is owed to Simon MacLean, who supervised the doctoral thesis whence this book sprang. He has remained generous with his encouragement and help over the years, and I feel privileged to have studied with such an amiable mentor. Stuart Airlie and John Hudson examined my thesis, and the critical scrutiny they cast over my ideas has improved this book considerably. At the Institute for Mediaeval Studies in St Andrews, I benefitted from an exceptional research environment. Among the many friends I made there I should like to single out Fernando Arias Guillén, Roberta Cimino, Kate Hammond, Kimberley-Joy Knight, Neil McGuigan and Matthew McHaffie for their camaraderie and support over the years. Prior to arriving as a PhD student in St Andrews, I was extremely fortunate to study at the University of Manchester under Paul Fouracre, whose teaching kindled my interest in early medieval history. Paul introduced me to Flodoard while I was writing my undergraduate dissertation and asked me questions that fundamentally shaped this project. My postgraduate studies would not have been possible without the financial support of the UK Arts and Humanities Research Council, the University of Manchester and the University of St Andrews. Further assistance from the Society for the Study of French History enabled me to undertake manuscript research in France and Italy. Since leaving St Andrews, I have had the privilege to work alongside and learn from colleagues and students at King’s College London, the Universidad del País Vasco, the University of Liverpool and, most recently, the University of Kent, where I am delighted to have found a congenial academic home. In particular, I wish to thank Alice Rio, Jinty Nelson, Francesca Tinti and Marios Costambeys for their sage advice and continued encouragement. I am very grateful to the Leverhulme Trust, whose Award of an Early Career Fellowship at the University of Liverpool enabled me to continue my tenth-century studies. I owe a great deal to Rosamond McKitterick, who as my editor read the entire manuscript and offered valuable criticisms and suggestions. Rob Gallagher, Kati Ilmat, Fraser McNair, Ingrid Rembold, Elizabeth Tyler, Graeme Ward and Jamie Wood all read portions of the book and provided important guidance and correction. I have also learned much from Shane Bobrycki, Marie-Céline Isaïa, Geoff Koziol, Rutger Kramer, Conrad Leyser, Levi Roach, Danica Summerlin, Charles West and many others. All those mentioned here have patiently listened to my problems and responded to my questions with wise counsel and good humour, for which I offer my sincere gratitude. On a more personal note, I want to thank my parents, without whose encouragement and support I would not have made it very far down this road, and, finally, Marguerite Regan, whose love and inspiration has sustained me throughout the writing of this book. For that and much else besides, I dedicate it to her.
