Contents

List of Figures
List of Tables
Acknowledgments

1 Running against All Odds
  1.1 The Puzzle of Opposition Candidacy
  1.2 Existing Explanations of Legislative Candidacy
  1.3 The Argument in Brief
  1.4 Contributions
  1.5 Organization of the Book

2 A Theory of Opposition Candidacy
  2.1 Electoral Authoritarianism
  2.2 Existing Theories of Candidacy
  2.3 Original Theory: Political Paths to Ambition
  2.4 Original Theory: Strategic Candidacy Framework under Electoral Authoritarianism
  2.5 Linking the Theory’s Parts Together

3 Electoral Authoritarianism in Tanzania
  3.1 Electoral Authoritarianism in Africa
  3.2 Electoral Authoritarianism in Tanzania
  3.3 Empirical Approach and Data Resources
  3.4 Analytical Strategy
Contents

4 Roots of Ambition: Civic Activism and Career Partisanship 127
  4.1 Opposition versus Ruling Party Paths to Candidacy 130
  4.2 Results 133
  4.3 Further Survey Evidence 135
  4.4 Contextualizing Results in Tanzania 137

5 From Roots to Branches: Career Pathways to Candidacy Choices 148
  5.1 Sequence Analysis: Political and Vocational Careers 148
  5.2 Sequence Analysis: Party, CSO/NGO, and Government Vocational Careers 149
  5.3 Statistical Analysis of Vocational Careers 153
  5.4 Statistical Analysis of Political Party Careers 156

6 Winning Party Nomination Contests 165
  6.1 Candidate Selection in Electoral Authoritarian Regimes 168
  6.2 Candidate Selection in Tanzania 170
  6.3 Candidate Perceptions of Nomination Procedures 175
  6.4 Candidate Experiences with Nominations 177
  6.5 How Civic Activism Impacts Nominations 181

7 Winning General Elections 185
  7.1 Hyper-Incumbency and Campaign Resources 188
  7.2 Overcoming Structural Constraints through Campaign Strategy 190
  7.3 Maximizing Electoral Returns from Campaign Expenditure 194
  7.4 How Civic Activism Impacts Election Strategy 197

8 Benefits of Winning (and Losing) Elections 205
  8.1 Benefits of Candidacy in Electoral Authoritarian Regimes 207
  8.2 Benefits of Losing Elections 217
  8.3 Origins of Benefits: Life Histories and Socialization 223

9 Costs of Competing in Authoritarian Elections 228
  9.1 Violence and Repression in Tanzania 229
Contents

- 9.2 Risk and Time Perspectives through Methali \( \text{p. 232} \)
- 9.3 How Civic Activism and Career Partisanship Shape Candidacy Costs and Risk Attitudes \( \text{p. 237} \)

10 Testing the Argument across Africa \( \text{p. 244} \)
- 10.1 Opposition Candidacy in Sub-Saharan Africa \( \text{p. 244} \)
- 10.2 Data Resource: African Legislatures Project \( \text{p. 247} \)
- 10.3 Testing the Theory in Other Electoral Authoritarian Regimes \( \text{p. 251} \)
- 10.4 Scope Conditions: Dominant Party Democracies \( \text{p. 265} \)
- 10.5 Scope Conditions: Competitive Democracies \( \text{p. 273} \)
- 10.6 Conclusions for African Politics and Authoritarian Regimes \( \text{p. 279} \)

11 Elections and Authoritarianism in the Twenty-first Century \( \text{p. 282} \)
- 11.1 Main Findings \( \text{p. 283} \)
- 11.2 Limitations \( \text{p. 287} \)
- 11.3 Implications \( \text{p. 289} \)

Appendix A
Qualitative and Survey Interviews: Sample Design, Response Rates, and Representativeness \( \text{p. 297} \)
- A.1 Legislator Survey \( \text{p. 297} \)
- A.2 Candidates and Noncandidate Surveys \( \text{p. 302} \)

Appendix B
Statistical Results, Analysis Details, and Robustness \( \text{p. 307} \)
- B.1 Supporting Material for Chapter 2 \( \text{p. 307} \)
- B.2 Supporting Material for Chapter 4 \( \text{p. 307} \)
- B.3 Supporting Material for Chapter 5 \( \text{p. 312} \)
- B.4 Supporting Material for Chapter 6 \( \text{p. 320} \)
- B.5 Supporting Material for Chapter 7 \( \text{p. 321} \)
- B.6 Supporting Material for Chapter 8 \( \text{p. 322} \)
- B.7 Supporting Material for Chapter 9 \( \text{p. 332} \)
- B.8 Supporting Material for Chapter 10 \( \text{p. 337} \)

References \( \text{p. 341} \)

Index \( \text{p. 371} \)